Beauty soaps went through with flying pastel colors.
Lava flunked.

Because Lava's got pumice in it. Grrrritty volcanic pumice.
That makes Lava the tough hardworking soap that does one thing

FAMILY MONEY MANAGEMENT

Peter Lindberg, Editor

How much life insurance do you need to protect your family?

As much as it takes to assure a normal life for them. There should be enough money to prevent financial worries, to allow your wife to be a full-time mother during the years she is most needed, and to give your children a good education.

Most experts say such a program requires coverage equal to three to five times your annual earnings. But this is only a general yardstick. The actual amount of insurance depends on your own family situation.

And no matter what your needs are, they're easier to meet if you start planning early, and update your program periodically.

As a first step, total up your family's estimated money needs:

Final expenses—hospital and doctor bills; funeral costs; probable current bills, installment debts and other obligations; estate settlement costs and possible estate taxes. These may often add up to $2,000 or more.

Family maintenance—the household expenses while your children are growing up, including food, housing, utilities, clothing, medical and dental bills, school expenses, recreation. For a mother with two children, figure on a minimum of $500 a month. Multiply your projected monthly figure by the number of months until your youngest child has finished his schooling. Age 22 is a good target date.

Education—For your youngsters to go to college, you'll need a minimum of $1,500 per child a year even with partial scholarships and part-time jobs. At some "name" colleges, expenses may run as high as $3,500 today, and by 1975 costs will probably have increased by a third.

Emergency fund—a liquid cash reserve that can be tapped quickly, but earns interest in the meantime. Try to provide at least $3,000.

Widow's maintenance—the monthly support for your wife after the children leave home. At current living costs, figure on at least $350 a month. To get the total figure, calculate what your wife's age will be on your youngest child's 22nd birthday (assuming he remains unmarried and in school until then); then count the number of months between that age and an assumed life expectancy of 74 years, and multiply the number of months by your monthly maintenance estimate.

Take this conservative example. A mother is 34 when her husband, also 34, dies; she does not remarry. There are two children, age 8 and 10.

Final expenses—$2,000.

Family maintenance—$500 every month for 14 years (168 months) until the youngest child is 22: $84,000.

Education—four years of college (at $2,500 a year) for each child: $20,000.

Emergency fund—$3,000.

Widow's maintenance—$350 each month for 26 years (312 months) from age 48 (when the youngest child is 22) to age 74: $109,200.

Total estimated needs: $218,200.

Before you get discouraged by your own family's probable requirements, take inventory of your assets:

- Existing equity in your home and in any other real estate.
- Existing life insurance, including group life and GI policies.
- Other assets like savings, securities, and business interests.

- Social Security: First, there is a lump-sum death benefit of up to $255. Then under maximum eligibility—and since 1965, this means an average income of $6,600 or higher—a widow with two children, who earns less than $1,500 a year, will be entitled to the family maximum of $368; this continues each month until the older child is 18. Then the benefit is reduced to $252 a month until the younger child is 18. However, the children can get benefits up to 22 if they're unmarried and going to school.

Social Security payments can start again when your widow is 60 or 62. Assuming maximum eligibility at current benefit rates, she can expect $120 a month at 60, or $138 if she delays filing until age 62.

- Potential earnings: Once your children are in high school, your wife may be able to go back to work without worries about their upbringing. However, it's wise here to underestimate her possible income—and, in some cases, not to count on it at all.

- Inheritance expectations: Here include only the inheritances you can be absolutely sure of.

Let's check the assets of our sample family described a few paragraphs ago.

Existing home equity: $9,000.

Existing life insurance: $20,000. (including $10,000 group life).

Savings and other assets: $5,000.

Social Security:

Death benefit $255.

Six years (72 months) without the mother working at $326.10 a month—$23,479.

The children are now 16 and 14, and the mother takes a full-time job. For the next six years, assuming the children go to college, benefits are reduced to $217.60 a month ($108.80 each child) until the older is 22 and loses eligibility. Total for the six years $15,667.

Mother continues to work; the youngest child is now 20 and since he keeps going to college and is unmarried, he is eligible for two more years at $108.80 a month. A total of $2,611.

At age 62, the widow again receives benefits based on her husband's eligibility. With an assumed life expectancy of 74 years, she will get $119.70 per month for 12 years (144 months), or $17,237.

Total Social Security: $59,249.

Potential earnings: At an average of $360 a month, the widow working for 22 years from age 40 to age 62 will earn $95,040.

Inheritance expectation: $3,000.

Estimate of total available assets: $191,289.
 This total is about $27,000 less than this family's estimated total needs. To bridge the gap, roughly $24,000 additional life insurance on the father probably would be enough, since this money—and other assets in the estate—can earn substantial interest over the years if handled properly.
 Of course, chances are excellent that you will live long enough to enjoy retirement. But this does not mean that the money put into additional life insurance is wasted. Permanent life insurance builds up a cash value you can borrow against in an emergency, draw on to help finance your children's education, or use for additional retirement security.

Are blue chips always safe investments?
 No investment is always safe, but in the long run, blue chips are often your safest stock purchase. That's because they're shares in companies that are known for their high quality, widely accepted products, and for their ability to make money and pay dividends.
 Even so, blue-chip stocks are like any other stock in one basic way: you lose if you buy when the market price is high and have to sell when the stock has declined. Let's look at the stocks of the 30 companies that make up the Dow Jones Industrial average, considered by some investors as the best bets in blue chips. In recent years, many of these stocks have doubled or tripled in value; yet others are down 50 percent or more from former highs.

For example, if you'd bought United States Steel in 1959, you would have paid about $108 a share; if you'd sold it in the spring of 1967, you might have gotten $46 a share. From its 1964 high of 75, American Telephone and Telegraph dropped more than 15 points in 1967, and DuPont dropped from 293 to less than 167. Then there's Standard Oil of New Jersey, which fell from 92 to around 64, or General Motors, which lost about 30 points from its high of 113.
 In many cases, fluctuations have little to do with the actual operations of the companies, but are caused by investors who bid the stock prices up and down. There are fads in stocks, and when a stock becomes popular, the rush to buy usually sends prices up beyond its value. Then when enough investors begin to sell to cash in on the rise (or because they realize dividends or earnings aren't in line with the high price), the stock drops since there are more sellers than buyers. Often the stock never regains its old popularity, even though the company is doing well.

Then, too, a company's blue-chip status is not guaranteed. Sometimes younger companies will make inroads, and the former leader will begin to slip. Several blue chips of twenty or even ten years ago have faded badly, and others are no longer even listed on the exchanges.
 The answer? Don't buy a stock just because someone has called it a blue chip. Study it carefully and buy it only if it fits your investment needs. Then watch it closely.

How can you fatten up your family nest egg?
 Once you've accumulated some cash, you can pick from several saving programs that will help it grow. But before you settle on any savings program, be sure you know what each one will do.
Commercial banks. Now you can get four percent interest on most regular metropolitan passbook accounts. However, many commercial banks issue savings certificates paying higher interest—up to five percent—if you keep your money in the certificates for a specified time. These certificates—called certificates of deposit, savings certificates, or saving bonds—often have maturity dates from 30 days to a year. Most often, you'll find them with maturity dates of three months, six months, nine months, and a year. You can buy them starting at about $20, but most are issued in the $500 to $2,500 range; usually, the longer the maturity, the higher the interest rate.

When you invest in these certificates, keep several points in mind. First, if you now have money drawing four percent in a regular commercial bank savings account and plan to keep it there for a long time, it makes sense to shift it to a savings certificate and collect from one-half to 1½ percent more interest. Second, the savings you put in these certificates are insured up to $15,000 where covered by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Finally, if you buy a certificate and withdraw your money before maturity, you lose the bonus interest.

• Savings and Loan Associations. You can get a return of four to 4.75 percent on your money at a savings and loan association, and up to 5¼ percent on certificates. Recently some West Coast savings and loan associations have boosted the rates to five or 5¼ percent on passbook loans and discontinued savings certificates; however, these higher rates may begin to dip somewhat.

Before you open a savings and loan account, make sure it's insured by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. And if you're considering an out-of-state firm, check with your attorney to avoid inheritance or property law problems or even state taxes.

• Mutual Savings Banks. You currently can get 4.25 to 4.5 percent on savings deposited in these banks, and in some places up to five percent on passbook accounts. However, like savings and loan associations, mutuals that pay high regular rates are discontinuing savings certificates.

• Savings Bonds. The interest rates of Series E and Series H bonds have been increased to 4.15 percent if you hold the bonds to maturity. Series E bonds take seven years to mature, and Series H bonds take 10 years. With Series E bonds your interest builds up over the years; with Series H bonds you get interest checks twice a year.

While the rates on savings bonds tend to be lower than those of other major savings institutions, you can buy them through payroll deductions. With E bonds, you don't pay taxes on the interest until you cash them in, and if combined with a new "Freedom share," they can yield 4.38 percent.

To reap the biggest rewards on your cash savings, you should know the ins and outs of savings accounts. Most banks offer "days of grace" on their savings accounts; if you deposit money within the first ten calendar days of the quarter, you'll collect interest from the first day of the quarter. At some banks, you can withdraw your money in the last three days of the quarter and still collect interest for the entire quarter.

If you need extra money temporarily during the year, you might find it best to keep your money in your savings account and get a passbook loan instead. This way, you avoid possible loss of quarterly interest, and you pay only a few percentage points more interest on your bank loan.

A portly man who last had a physical examination in 1956 makes out a check to the Heart Fund while consuming a late-night Dagwood sandwich. Is he fighting heart disease or encouraging it? Why give money for medical research if you don't pay any attention to the findings? Whatever the answers, this man clearly is not alone. His selfish health personality is shared by nearly all of us. On the high plane of words and donations, we attack disease with bold determination. But we shy away from the daily combat that determines who really wins. This is medicine's most troublesome paradox, a source of enormous frustration and waste. Here, the editors of Better Homes and Gardens point out how you can change your ways—if you really want to!

FAMILY HEALTH

HOW NOT TO UNDERMINE YOUR HEALTH

Never before in the history of medicine has so much good advice been so casually ignored by so many intelligent men and women. Ignorance is not to blame. The facts and the warnings are constantly repeated, using every means of public announcement. We simply choose to disregard them.

Millions of overweight Americans, fully aware of the threat to their health, continue to stuff themselves. Cigarette smokers, including many doctors, persist in a habit they recognize as harmful. People who know darn well they need more exercise go out of their way to avoid it. Women forgo Papanicolaou smear tests despite being told again and again that an early detection of cervical cancer could add many years to their lives. Immunizations against polio and tetanus are put off or permitted to lapse. Everyone skips annual physical exams. The indictment goes on and on.

What causes this strange behavior? When we receive sound medical advice—much of it based on research we helped pay for—why do we toss it aside? Is it possible that we secretly enjoy ruining our health?

Answering these questions is like determining the true causes of a car wreck: an unlicensed driver, a bit tipsy, exceeding the speed limit after a fight with his wife, driving a borrowed jalopy with bald tires on a poorly-marked road in a fog. It's hard to sort everything out.

We decided to try a new tack in this month's health article. It's our theory that you would be a lot less likely to undermine your health if you took a long look at yourself—as if through someone else's eyes. So we'll sketch for you some of the foolhardy individuals who ignore all the published health warnings.

Chances are, you will see your own reflection in our rogue's gallery more than once. And by the way, if you are a woman please don't take comfort from our choosing all men as the bad examples. The health undermining business has a big, active ladies' auxiliary.

The Hero. This fellow wants to be applauded for bravery he does not, in fact, possess. He would like to become an astronaut, but the risks are much too high. He sometimes thinks he will stand up to his boss, but that always turns out to be inconvenient. So he finds another outlet for his special brand of courage. As a heavy cigarette smoker, he flies into the teeth of medical warnings with an air of elaborate scorn. One can visualize the fighter pilot's scarf around his neck as he lights up one cigarette after another. In his gaudier moments, he even uses paper matches and does not close the cover before striking!

The Judge. He pictures himself presiding at a trial of cholesterol, calories, and other well-known culprits. He refuses to hand down a hasty verdict. "All the evidence is in yet," he says—and of course he's right. But that attitude tends to paralyze judgment. After all, the villains aren't in jail waiting for a jury; they're still at large doing their damage. In this case, no action is very definitely bad action.

The Pessimist. This fellow has evolved a philosophy one step beyond Murphy's Law ("If anything can go wrong, it will.") He believes that if anything can go wrong, it already has—and he doesn't want to know about it. If he foolishly walked into a doctor's office, he has no doubt at all that he would leave it on a stretcher. His reluctance to face the moments is profound: "Troubles enough I don't have to face, I should learn more?"

The Fatalist. All things, this man contends, are written in the stars. If your destiny is to die from a rusty nail wound, getting immunized against tetanus won't help. If your name has been selected for an early heart attack, what difference does it make how much rich food you eat? The results will be exactly the same. This man is re-writing "Invictus," the famous poem by William Ernest Henley that ends: "I am the master of my fate; I am the captain of my soul." The fatalist's ending is different: "I am the powerless slave of my fate. I am the Pfc. of my soul."

The Gambler. This man always figures the percentages. When he stops his car at a parking meter, the question of whether to feed it a nickel is decided by the odds that he might get away without paying, weighed against the size of the fine if he doesn't. He arrives at decisions concerning his health in a similar manner. Accidents and illnesses always happen to "the other guy." Eventually, he decides that the odds are 20-to-1, say, that his reckless driving won't kill him. And that's too good a bet to pass up.

The Diagnostician. He has nothing against doctors, you understand, but isn't it the patient who feels healthy or sick? Why see a doctor or alter your habits if you don't suffer aches or pains? This man is convinced that when trouble appears, nature will make an announcement—to the patient, not the doctor. To see a doctor before then, according to his theory, is a waste of time and money; how can you fix something until it breaks? He denies the value of early detection and his vocabulary does not include "prevention."

The Procrastinator. Doctors find it difficult to deal with a fellow because he accepts every word of advice they give him and understands precisely what to do. He realizes his job gives him too much tension, so he promises to spend more time relaxing—as soon as his current project is finished. His weight is substantially higher than it should be, so he cuts down on the amount he eats—starting right at the holidays. He needs to get himself in better condition so he'll run at least a mile every morning—when the weather improves, of course. He also intends to have his vision examined; he'll make an appointment one of these days.

So how can you keep from undermining your own health? There are no quick cures for the sort of human folly reflected in all these examples. Nor would it be wise to engage in a grim, drawn-out war against every conceivable threat to your welfare. Such a struggle would itself be exhausting and unhealthy. One characteristic of a man in good health is that his physical condition never distracts him from enjoying his regular pursuits.

What is the proper attitude to take, then? The most reasonable is a mixture of three basic traits: 1) moderation, 2) the ability to act without delay, and 3) a sense of responsibility to yourself and others.

Moderation offsets the many threats to sound health posed by various extremes. No one needs to panic when he discovers that his weight is two pounds above the ideal, but if that excess rises to twenty-five pounds, say, he is foolish not to take corrective action. In the same way, smoking a few cigarettes a day can be ignored—an acceptable concession to long years of habit—but two packs a day is something to worry about again. And missing an occasional physical checkup is nothing to fret about; the danger arises when you skip examinations for five or ten years at a stretch.

Sometimes it's hard to determine when a relatively minor transgression turns into a major threat. But don't overlook the value of plain common sense. People seldom make a wrong health decision—rather, they tend to avoid making any decision.

The ability to act without undue hesitation is the best way to get the upper hand on bad habits. Good habits then make good basic health almost automatic. For example, when you are reminded that it's time for a checkup, lift the telephone receiver immediately and make an appointment with the doctor. Don't stop to manufacture excuses. Just do it. The longer you delay, the less likely you will ever get around to doing it. If you need to lose weight, start the very next meal—and make no elaborate announcements. By calling the attention of others to your goals, you only make them harder to achieve—as demonstrated by the baseball player who drops an easy fly because the fans have unnerved him with shouting. "Careful now! Take it easy!"

The acceptance of personal responsibility is absolutely essential. Never rely on anyone else to keep you alive and healthy. Doctors, if asked, offer limited assistance, but their primary obligation is yours—and you owe it to your family as well as to yourself. This burden is all the more appropriate in an age when so much (for individuals and for civilization) depends on the triumph of reason over instinct and on responsibility over carelessness.

This new type spare tire isn't much larger than the wheel itself and takes only about half the space needed for a conventional tire and wheel.

When a flat occurs, just put the "Space Saver" on, inflate with an inflator bottle, and you're on your way—and at turnpike speeds. When the flat is fixed, just deflate the Space Saver to its former size and put it back in the trunk for the next emergency. Good for about 4,000 miles—a lifetime of "spare tire" driving.

Available only in a 7.35 x 14 blackwall at present.

Space Saver Spare, about $34 at B. F. Goodrich stores. B. F. Goodrich Co., 500 S. Main, Akron, Ohio. 44318.

If spills or the housecleaning urge strike, your wife can easily glide the machine out, perform the cleanup, and roll it back into place—all without your lifting a hand.

On hunting, fishing, or camping trips, you get the same shave as in the comfort of your own home.

An easy twist of the adjuster dial raises the cutting heads through four shaving positions—lets you tailor the shaver to your beard and skin.

Just set it and forget it! This sprinkler with built-in timer will deliver up to 1200 gallons of water per setting, then shut itself off.

Set the large hand (the small one serves only as a reminder) to one of the numbers on the dial. Each number stands for approximately 100 gallons of water. Then you can be off to more important things than sprinkler watching. Also eliminate wasteful runoff resulting from a forgotten sprinkler.

Other features include four coverage patterns, brass jet nozzles and rustproof construction throughout.

Most compressed air sprayers, up to the four-gallon size, can be easily attached to the cart without the use of tools.

The large 5 1/2-inch rubber-tired wheels aren't affected by minor bumps in the turf so that moving even a fully loaded sprayer is a smooth operation.

BETTER BUYMANSHIP BUILDING PRODUCTS

HOW TO SHOP FOR PANELING

Since paneling is large in size and wide in variety, even a well-equipped retail outlet can stock only a small percentage of what's available. At a discount-type building-supply store that serves a booming suburb, for example, the inventory is tailored to the needs of do-it-yourself homeowners. You see only a little raw construction lumber, but there are stacks and racks and bins of paneling in a variety of woods—everything from natural birch to something called “blue mink.”

FACT: In a few ways, all the paneling here is identical. It's all three-ply, hardwood plywood, factory prefinished, in 4x8-foot sheets. If that's what you want, you're got it made. Try for something else, though, and you may find the stock has limitations.

“I need paneling for a nine-foot-high wall,” you say. “Do you have anything longer than eight feet?”

“Well, paneling does come in ten-foot heights,” the salesman allows. “But man, it costs! Now if it was me, I'd find what I want in eight-foot and piece in at the top or bottom.”

FACT: He's outlining a do-it-yourself nightmare, and probably a sloppy result. Plywood paneling is easy to cut if you have a fine-tooth saw and a fairly steady hand, but few amateurs can match edges and wood tones well.

And plywood does come in nine-foot heights, as well as ten and seven-foot sizes. The special lengths can cost as much as one third more than the eight-footers, but if you have non-standard walls, they're well worth the difference.

At a smaller building-supply house, the salesman may be equally uninformed about what's available.

“I'd like to put molding around my windows,” you say. You point to a panel of smoothly finished oak and ask, “Can I get prefinished molding to match this?”

“Nope, the manufacturers won't fool with matched molding for all these different woods. What we do, though, is carry plain pine, any shape you could want. Then you just pick out the stain that matches and put it on yourself.”

FACT: But you'll need lots of time, patience, and skill. Although you may have to shop around to find it, prefinished molding is available to match or complement prefinished paneling. In fact, it's becoming a standard in many brand-name lines.

At a lumberyard, you may find less variety in veneers than at a do-it-yourself building-supply house. But a connection here could lead to a wider choice.

“I like this antique birch,” you tell the fellow who comes over to help you. “I'm going to need five panels, though, and three of the seven here are darker than the others.”

“Tell you what,” he says, “I'll give you a card that will get you into our distributor's warehouse. He'll match paneling with you all day. Go on over and select what you want, and he'll deliver it here.”

A lumberyard has a kind of built-in hometown flavor. The owner himself and his seasoned employees can give you good information about the differences in plywood quality, and a reasonable advice about working with paneling.

But a lumberyard salesman is likely to be no help at all if you want information on such things as plastic-coated hardboard, or artificially grained plywood paneling, on which to grain color and pattern are printed by a rotogravure process

"I'm a wood peddler—no imitations for me," he says.

FACT: His lumping together of all "imitation" wood surfaces is misleading. Not all artificially grained paneling is hardboard. Some manufacturers use printed graining on hard wood plywood for two reasons: first, to achieve uniformly hand some graining and uniform color tones; second, to make exotic wood finishes and matched moldings available at relatively low cost (about $9 per panel). Artificial paneling can be very convincing. When it's used on plywood, it may even fool paneling salesmen—who sometimes sell it without knowing what it is.

"What about this basement playroom I've got in mind? you ask the "wood peddler." "The room is a little damp. Will plywood hold up against moisture?"

He gives you a level look. "Wood always holds up better than hardboard," he says.

FACT: Actually, hardboard (or flakeboard or particle board) is made of reprocessed wood, and therefore has most of the properties of wood. But since it has no natural grain, it resists "grain rise" and warping. And it's often given a tough plastic surface, making it less vulnerable to dampness and denting.

Downtown, you find a big department store that advertises "Everything you need for home remodeling." Here "everything"—including both plywood and synthetic paneling—is sold on special order, via samples and catalogs.

"Natural grain plywood varies a lot in tone, doesn't it? you ask. "How can I be sure the sheets will match?"

"Just order it all at the same time," the salesman says.

FACT: Out of a dozen sheets in a single packing box, perhaps only three or four will be a really close match. With nonstandard sizes, of course, you're generally forced to accept what you get. But there's no need to buy standard 4x8-foot plywood from a store that sells through samples. Take advantage of the big inventories elsewhere and select the panels yourself.

With synthetic-surface panels, you don't have to worry about matching, and the sample store is one place where you can get a full view of the enormous variety now available—including products you seldom see in anyone's inventory. The catalog salesman gives these new products a fair shake, but he may be short on real knowledge about them.

Looking through samples of hardboard, you say, "Is this okay for a bathroom-dressing room?"

The salesman pulls out his magic word. "It's synthetic. You can't hurt it with moisture or anything else."

FACT: Practically all of today's paneling, including prefinished plywood, can be kept clean with a damp sponge. But even the synthetics vary widely in their resistance to consistent damp air. Some plywoods and most hardboards are treated with a plastic coating that provides better-than-average resistance, but not enough for a room that's constantly moist.

Plywood or hardboard coated with plastic is fine for standard room paneling, for kitchens, and for dampish basement. Even more durable is paneling with a glossy melamine-silicone finish that actually provides a seal against moisture. Some melamine-silicone panels can even be used in shower enclosures. And the most moisture-resistant are high-pressure laminates made specifically for very wet areas.

In the paneling marketplace, it's definitely to your advantage to select among the brand names you know. Most large manufacturers make all kinds of paneling—synthetic as well as plywood—so their brochures and labels seldom exaggerate the value of one type at the expense of the other. And some makers offer clearly defined grades that rank the same type of wood according to grain quality and finish.

CARS IN YOUR FAMILY

Duane L. Gregg, Automotive Editor

VITAL CAR ACCESSORIES FOR YOUR VACATION

So you're going on a trip. You've checked and double-checked and are convinced that everything the family could possibly need is ready to be loaded. But have you packed for your car? If not, devote a few minutes to it and be prepared to turn what could be a real emergency into a minor inconvenience.

Fire extinguisher: It's a good idea to carry an extinguisher in your car at all times. Be sure the extinguisher is fully charged and contains an all-purpose extinguishing agent that is effective on Class A, B, and C fires and has at least a 2½-pound capacity. All well-known manufacturers make such units.

Where you store the extinguisher is very important. Keep it (preferably solidly anchored) in the passenger compartment rather than in the trunk. One of the best setups for a fire is a rear-end collision where the gas tank ruptures and the leaking gas ignites. If this happens, the trunk lid will be mangled and a trunk-stored extinguisher will be inaccessible.

And don't get a false sense of security just because you carry an extinguisher—these small units just can't cope with a blazing inferno. But they will quickly snuff out a small electrical, grease, or gasoline fire—or one caused by overheated brakes or a misplaced cigarette. They're also great to quell a campfire that is getting out of hand.

Jack and tire-changing tools: No doubt you have a jack in your car, but have you used it recently? It's not uncommon to find a jack inoperative or lacking critical parts just when it's needed most. Be sure to include a tool for removing the hub cap and a couple of wedge-shaped blocks to prevent the car from rolling off the jack. While you're at it, check the spare for proper inflation.

Gloves, coveralls, drop cloth: A pair of work gloves will help prevent barked knuckles and greasy hands that often result from tire changing or on-the-spot repairs. A pair of coveralls can offer a lot of protection to good clothes in a roadside emergency. A piece of canvas, a drop cloth, or a fender cover can be placed under the car to keep you out of the dust and dirt if under-car repairs are necessary. It also offers a dry base of operations for changing a flat tire on a muddy shoulder, and can be used to protect the front fenders from scratches while you're making under-hood repairs.

Flares or warning lights: If your car is a late model, it probably is equipped with a four-way flasher system. This will do a good job of attracting the other driver's attention on a straight, level road. But what if you're stranded just over the crest of a hill or around a curve? For maximum protection, carry a box of flares or a couple of the battery-operated flasher units to place well ahead of and/or behind your stalled vehicle to give adequate warning to oncoming cars.

Tire inflator: A tire pump used to be in every well-stocked trunk but now there's a better way. Take along one or two of the new pressurized inflator-sealer cans. They contain compressed air and a sealant so you can inflate and seal a punctured tire in a few seconds. Then you can drive up to 100 miles to get the puncture permanently fixed.

Well-stocked tool kit: This should include at least two adjustable wrenches or a set of combination wrenches, a pair of pliers, several screwdrivers of assorted sizes and types, and a flashlight or emergency work light. The tool kit is also a good place to keep spare fuses and light bulbs, provided they are properly packaged to prevent breakage.

Extra belts: Include an extra fan and power-steering belt in your equipment. If either of these belts breaks, you're just plain stranded until replacements are found. Even if you don't feel competent to do the job, having replacements available will make it possible for a highway patrolman, truck driver, or fellow motorist to get you on the go. And even if the old belts give out right in front of a service station or garage, there's no assurance that they'll stock the right belt for your car. But if you have a spare belt, they can install for you. If your car is air conditioned, carrying a spare belt for the compressor is also a good idea.

Extra oil: Take along an extra quart of the brand and weight motor oil you normally use (several if your car shows a thirst for oil). If the oil pressure drops or the warning light goes on, a quart of oil may be all that's needed to get to the nearest service station. A quart of automatic transmission fluid is a two-way safety help, because the same fluid is used in the automatic transmission and the power steering unit.

Snap-on tire chains: If camping backwoods exploration figure in your trip plans, you'd better anticipate the possibility of getting stuck in the mud. A set of snap-on chains can help get you on your way.

Extra water: If you'll be traveling through the desert or your car tends to overheat, better include a can of water. It's a good idea even if you have never experienced overheating problems; the combination of heavier-than-usual load and hot weather, especially if the car has an air conditioner, can put quite a strain on the cooling system.

Gasoline: Carrying an extra can of gasoline isn't recommended. A can of gas stored in a hot car trunk can create quite a hazard. Expansion can result in a trunk full of fumes and liquid gasoline—a good setup for an explosion or fire. You might want to include an empty gallon can. Armed with it, you can go to the nearest station and be assured of a container to take fuel back to your car.

The smallest refrigerator we make is in the big new refrigerators we make.

You put meat in it, but that's the only similarity between our meat keeper and everyone else's. Amana's meat keeper is really a "refrigerator within a refrigerator." Because it refrigerates while it stores. Lets you keep meat without spoiling, twice as long as ordinary meat trays.

Amana's meat keeper has a special cold control of its own.

A separate jet of cold air surrounds the meat keeper pan, to cradle it in a blanket of cold (as much as 10 degrees colder than the rest of the refrigerator). This way, your meat stays fresh and flavorful longer.

Our "little refrigerator" is a bonus you get with our big refrigerators. Like the Amana 17 (16.7 cubic feet) shown. Or the new Amana 19 with 18.9 cubic feet of storage space including a big 5.3 cubic foot freezer at the top. All this in a 32" width. Occupies no more space in your kitchen than most 16 or 17 cubic foot refrigerators yet provides greater storage capacity than any of them.

Just check these features: Fast freeze shelf, independent cold controls for both refrigerator and freezer compartments (set temperature in one without affecting the other), butter conditioner, porcelain crispers, and Free-O'-Frost, too. Both models are available with Amana's automatic ice maker.

No other maker knows refrigeration like Amana.

SHOULD YOU TAKE YOUR CHILDREN TO EUROPE?

It's certainly a family project worth considering, particularly once your youngsters have reached their teens. But Europe abounds in interests and activities for children of any age, and even grade-school kids can benefit greatly from this exciting and educational experience. What's more, the cost involved is much lower than you might think.

As you travel, you'll find that excellent sitter services, staffed by experienced adults and responsible university students, are available in most major cities. Your international airline or hotel, or the tourist information office in the city you are visiting will refer you to reliable organizations. Average rates range from about 25 cents an hour in Norway to about $1 in Paris.

Special sight-seeing tours can be booked for children. A children's morning tour of Paris costs $5, including refreshments. In many countries, you can also make arrangements through the government travel offices for your youngster to visit local children at their own homes (and for you to become friends with their parents). Typical hospitality programs are "Amsterdam Receives," "Italians at Home," "Meet the Danes," and "Find the Finns."

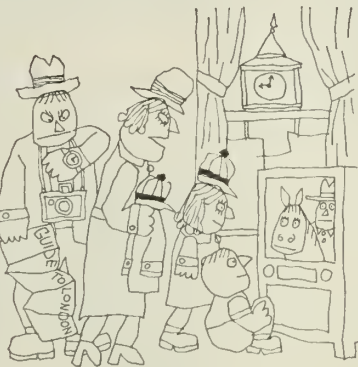

For a really valuable, enjoyable experience, let your child spend several days, or maybe even two or three weeks, with European playmates of his own age. Meanwhile, you follow parts of your vacation itinerary that would not interest him, or where it would not be practical to take him along.

For a few days' stay, Europe has a type of institution unknown in this country: the "children's hotel." In these fine country-club-like places with excellent play and sports facilities, children from one to twelve are supervised by trained staffs. Rates range from about $3 to $6 a day, all-inclusive.

For a longer period—two weeks is generally the minimum—you'll find camps the best bet. Many outstanding camps and children's camping trips are available wherever you may go, and prices are surprisingly modest by our standards. In the Netherlands, for instance, your child can join a riding camp, where the kids ride Shetland ponies, for $21 a week. Camps in Norway average about $30 a week. A typical Swiss camp charges about $175 for three weeks, including language classes and excursions.

Necessary papers. The requirements are the same for children as for adults. Each traveler must carry proof of smallpox vaccination within three years of the date of re-entry to the United States. Your family doctor can handle both vaccination and necessary certificate of proof.

Passports are obtained through the Passport Agency, Department of State (check the yellow pages for the location in your city). Each passport costs $10 plus the price of the two required photographs. A family has a choice of individual passports or one family passport. For a family of four going abroad, a family passport, which requires a group photograph, means a saving of $30; but remember, one passport means everybody stays together.

Boat or plane? Most ships carry children between the ages of one and twelve at half fare; twelve and up, full fare. Children under the age of one are charged a nominal fee—somewhere in the range of $20 to $40, depending on which class of ticket the parents have.

By airplane, half fare is charged between the ages of two and twelve, above that full fare. Under the age of two, the charge is ten percent of the accompanying adult's fare, and the child travels free for the domestic portion of the overseas flight. In a full plane, you may have to hold the baby on your lap, but many airlines can provide a limited number of bulkhead bassinets if notified well in advance.

If cost, rather than time, is the deciding factor on how your family will go abroad, don't forget to add in the service tips that ship travel entails, a cost you will not face if you go by air. Conversely, the cost of those four or five extra days in Europe—rooms, meals, sight-seeing, and recreation—gained by those who fly must be weighed against the price of boat passage.

Children's accommodations in flight. The airlines are fully equipped to perform miracles of service in midair but only if they know in advance what's wanted. When you make your flight reservations, let the airline know the age of the child or children you will be traveling with and any special requirements. Most airlines stock just about everything a mother might need, from disposable diapers and formula warmers down to safety pins and rubber nipples.

Many airlines maintain full nurseries at major airports and even offer sitter services while Mother goes through customs.

Children's accommodations aboard ship. The larger passenger ships are as fully equipped to divert and care for children as the best resorts. There are playrooms supervised by trained stewardesses and stocked with a variety of games and playground equipment.

All major ships carry complete supplies for infants. The staff will make up baby formula if the mother supplies the bottles. Older children can dine with their parents or at a special children's seating about one hour before the first adult seating. Special children's menus are available.

Cribs are available, and you can have one put in your room before you board ship.

For reservations or more information on any of the ideas in this article, see your local travel agent.

A COMPACT CONTEMPORARY WITH EXCEPTIONAL STYLE

By Jerry Reedy, Associate Building Editor

Photographs: Lisanti. Homeowner: H. Bernard Data: June Ed

Here's an eye-catching contemporary that really breaks away from the herd. In 1,852 square feet, it has the kind of architectural excitement you'd expect to find only in a much larger, more expensive house.

Built on Biscayne Bay in Florida, the house was designed to be completely private, yet make the most of the subtropical setting and year-round good weather.

Above: The house looks big from the front. In fact, the linear arrangement of the rooms and the horizontal sweep of the multi-level roof lines make it appear almost massive.

The lattices are constructed of two-inch wood strips spaced close together; each section forms the exterior of a shallow lanai, or porch, and screens a separate room beyond from the street. The interior walls of the lanais are room-high glass doors.

Simple in concept, the latticed lanais perform a complex task: they let in an abundance of light and fresh air without sacrificing privacy. Both exterior and interior walls are made of unfinished concrete block.

Upper Right: Step right down to this inviting living room. It's completely open to the main corridor, but the high-beamed ceiling and sunken floor give it a distinctive atmosphere of its own. Built-in furniture makes the room seem much larger than its 17x24 feet and simplifies redecorating. When you feel like changing the decor, simply buy a new rug and replace or re-cover the cushions and pillows.

Right: Old, red bricks contribute a warm, traditional feeling to the approach; an overhanging roof and flanking walls of concrete block shelter the entry and create a private cove for greeting guests.

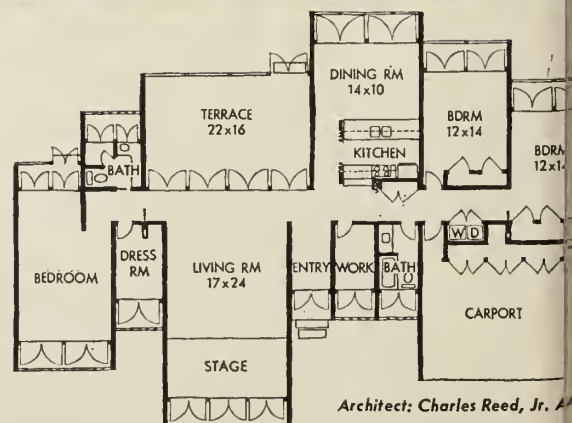

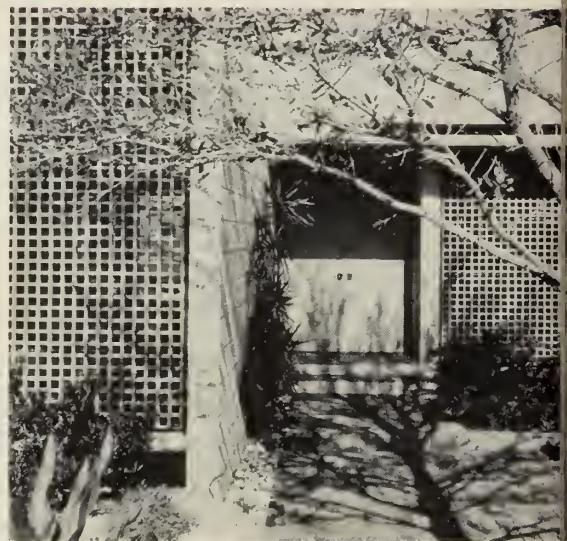

Double doors open wide to let traffic move in and out smoothly. The two-inch wood strips of the lanais are effective privacy screens even at this range.

Plan: One long corridor down the center of the house moves traffic so efficiently you're hardly aware of it. With the exception of the dining room, each room borders directly on the corridor and none of the rooms has through-traffic.

The living, eating, and entertaining areas work together at the center of the house; bedrooms enjoy the quiet at each end. Extra buffering from a dressing room and bath makes the master bedroom an especially peaceful place.

The overall dimensions of the house are 78x50 feet; total living space is 1,852 square feet. The terrace, lanais, and carport are not included as living space.

"My husband brought home Cold Power and I had a fit."

Writes Mrs. Paul A. Smith, Dobbs Ferry, New York

"My husband did me a favor on Saturday and went shopping for me. Instead of bringing home my usual detergent, he got Cold Power. I had a fit. But I had a pile of laundry so I had to use it anyway and I have never been so happy with the results.

"Socks get really white.

"My wash is really white. I had trouble with my children's white socks, the dirt would come out, but they never had the really white look until your Cold Power.

"Just had to write and tell you how wonderful I think your product is.

"Never before have I ever written to a company about any product, but this product I just had to sing the praise of.

"Last but not least, I love using cold water, the clothes have a real fresh smell."

The partition between the dining room and the kitchen has sliding panels you can open to any spot you like. For example, you might open the panel above the range for serving, keep all the panels closed during dinner, then open the one over the dishwasher at cleanup time.

The open space above the partition aids ventilation and lets light through from the clerestory window. The pass-through at right serves the terrace.

On this terrace, only a screen comes between you and the outdoors, yet there's a roof over your head, a comfortable living room across the hall, and a convenient kitchen just beyond the pass-through.

Out here, you can serve snacks and refreshments, or complete meals—the terrace makes an informal, and ideal, second dining room. On rainy days, turn the terrace into a playroom for the children; even the most rough-and-tumble games can't hurt a floor of fixed river gravel. And you can pick up tabs on things from either the kitchen or the hallway. If you're giving a party, throw the doors open and combine the terrace and the living room into a single, large entertainment area. Guests like to wander around and here they can enjoy a change of scene without leaving the party. At cleaning time, all you need is a garden hose.

Here it is—our fifth annual collection of great ideas to make your home more livable and lookable, inside and out! Many of these ideas are from our 1966 $100 Home Improvement Idea Contest (for names, see page 122). Furnish your own labor and you can have any idea in this collection for under $100 in materials. Of course if you have the job done, total cost will depend on such variables as labor costs in your area and the preliminary work the project entails. Regardless—each and every idea will give you a really big return for your money—so go to it!

1. Really cool screen for patio privacy—$86. Translucent fiber glass panels fronting this outdoor living area protect privacy but admit light. The open bases and the setback panel in the middle permit air to circulate freely. Use redwood 4x4s to anchor corners of the 5½-foot-high screens and 2x4s for runners and vertical dividers. Finish the wood with an exterior stain-sealer.

2. Big effect for a little window—$25. Don't settle for a pint-size window treatment. Instead, turn that dinky window into a focal point by widening it and extending it from floor to ceiling. Box in the sides and top with 8-inch-wide plywood panels, and face with 2½-inch picture-frame molding. Paint or stain the wood members and choose drapery fabric that harmonizes with your decor.

3. This highboy drawer-to-desk switch—$4. Granted, a highboy is a highly unlikely spot for a desk—but it couldn't be handier. Just take the space formerly occupied by one deep drawer (or two small drawers) and turn it into a desk. Remove front panel of drawer and attach to cross brace with a piano hinge and two desk hinge-stops. Cover writing surface with plastic laminate—then write a letter.

4. Potted plants on the rocks—$5. Choose a large, porous volcanic stone (often found at garden centers) and chisel out holes for plants—houseplants were used here, but you could substitute potted garden plants. Wear sturdy gloves while working. This stone is jagged, yet deceptively lightweight.

5. Candle-lit columns for a patio—$1. Light your patio table with the soft glow of candles from these openwork aluminum "lamps." Cut disks from 1-inch boards—the ones shown are 1½, 2, and 4 inches in diameter. Cut sections from the aluminum sheet to get varied heights—make wide enough to fit snugly to the disks. Wire the cut edges of metal together to form a column. Lift off disk to place or light candles.

6. A-frame for small fry—$5. This source of endless, imaginative play for children is an attractive addition to the garden. Build it in the children's play area or place it in the main garden where it will show to good advantage and children can be kept in view.

Rest the house on 4x4 posts set in concrete and bolt the 2x4 floor joists to them—joists extend out in front to support the deck. Frame the seven-foot-high, 6x7-foot house with 2x4s and cover with 3/4-inch plywood. Use cedar shakes to make unit watertight and reasonably maintenance-free.

7. Three planter-screens—$5. Use these stair-stepped planter-screens to create a semi-enclosure and a terminal focal point for a section of the garden. Make three planters from 2x8 redwood boards nailed to form simple 4x2-foot boxes. Set the planters front edge to back edge to get the setback staggered pattern. These range in size from one to three boards tall to give the overall variations in height.

Brace the five-foot-high screen sections—two-inch laths spaced 1/2 inch apart on top of 2x4 redwood frame—to planters. Here giant flax plants in planters, and agave and succulents dot the pebble mulch.

8. King-size sunscreen—$80. You get a lot of protection from the sun with a big lath shade like this one covering your terrace. Position the 12x20-foot slatted roof atop the post-and-beam framework. Secure the two 2x12 beams to the 4x4 posts (set in concrete) with 1/2-inch metal straps held with lag screws.

Use five 2x4s that run the length of the lath top to support the 1x4 laths. Brace the laths to a vertical position with 2x4 spacer blocks. Stain the unit to protect wood and give uniform finish. Plantings soften the big paved area.

The refrigerator with a thousand faces.

No matter how beautiful a refrigerator looks when you buy it, after a while it can get terribly boring. But no more.

You can own the new Whirlpool Connoisseur Twin for the next 20 years and change its looks every day without repeating yourself once. Match or contrast your kitchen curtains, walls, cabinets or floor.

How does it work?

The doors have frames around them. To change decor, just insert the material of your choice: curtain fabric, wallpaper, floor vinyl, ¼" plywood . . . even a photo of your favorite husband. Do you have to be a mechanic? Ma'am you don't even have to be a man. Incidentally, the refrigerator comes in 4 edged colors: sapphire, copper, avocado, and fawn . . . or classic white.

Of course our new refrigerator is more than just a decorator's dream. It's no-frost, with a capacity of over 21 cubic feet, which is the equivalent of a full-size refrigerator and a full-size freezer. You can order it with or without an automatic ice-maker. And you yourself can change doors to swing left or right from the sides or the center.

Maybe all this is wasted on you—maybe you don't need a new refrigerator. But, ma'am, don't you wish you did?

9. Portable room divider screen for a kitchen—$26. Here it creates separate areas for eating and cooking—but it would fit in almost anywhere. Two spring poles at the top hold divider steady, let you take it along if you move. Frame the unit with 2x2 posts and 1x2 crosspieces; fill spaces between with squares of 1/2-inch flakeboard and panels of colored glass.

10. An easygoing walk—$2. A really quick way to enhance an entry with a few basic building materials. Build a framework of redwood 2x4s, then fill the framework with white-rock and concrete steppingstones. To make the steppingstones, build molds from well-staked strips of metal or hardboard, then fill with concrete and cure.

11. Six-foot stereo center—$8. It's easy to build this long, professional-looking stereo cabinet. Here's all you need: two 4x8 sheets of walnut plywood, half a sheet of fir plywood, hinges, grille cloth, 1x2s (for bracing), and a can of finish. Hinge the middle section for access to components; cover speakers with grille cloth.

12. Garden tool "garage"—$6. Keep garden supplies and tools in a rugged, double-door cabinet behind your garage. Shelves in the doors make everything handy; an extension of the right side screens the cabinet from the patio. Build center section first. Fit doors with shelves before hanging. For easy cleaning, make floor removable.

What does a banana have to be to be a Chiquita*?

It's sort of like passing the physical to become a Marine.

The banana's got to be the right height. The right weight. The right everything.

Right off, it has to be a good eight inches along the outer curve. And at least one and a quarter inches across the middle. It has to be plump. The peel has to fit tightly. The banana has to be sleek and firm.

It has to be good enough to get through a 15-point inspection. Not once, but three separate times.

Occasionally, though, a banana comes along that's got everything going for it—except maybe it's a smidgen under minimum length.

We should pull it, we know. But our inspectors have hearts, too.

Which is why you may sometimes find a Chiquita Brand Banana that isn't quite eight inches long.

Come to think of it, though, you sometimes find Marines named "Shorty," too.

*Chiquita is a registered trademark for United Fruit Company's brand of bananas.

13. A built-in that flanks an archway with entertainment—$54. You can take advantage of the wasted space on both sides of an archway with a built-in like this. You build two simple plywood bookshelf-cabinets to store your whole hi-fi system and record collection. Fasten in place, then visually tie the two units together with a long shelf across the top of the arch.

14. Twin built-ins that solve a window wall problem—$38. You build these cabinets the easiest possible way with uprights and shelves of fir plywood. Then, you add style with grass-cloth-covered doors. Build a light valance between the two units—just a piece of plywood with a fluorescent fixture attached to the back. Storage, beauty, and light—as easy as that!

15. A space divider to cover a stairway and add storage—$42. Here's another unit for squeezing out a little more storage space in your living room, right where you need it most. Build the whole unit from hardwood plywood, dimensioned to suit your particular situation. Then add a custom-furniture look by applying stock moldings before finishing.

16. A decorative, low-maintenance garden path—$18. Pebble concrete steppingstones set into loose gravel form this attractive pathway. Remove the sod in the path area, lay polyethylene sheets to suppress weeds and grass. Lay redwood 2x4s at path edges to keep the gravel in place. Set steppingstones into position, then fill the remaining area with gravel.

17. A sunlight-sifting gazebo to grace your backyard—$27. The building is easy—set 4x4 posts at each corner, then nail 2x8 headers around the top. Make the roof from 1x1 wood strips spaced an inch apart. Nail some of the same strips on each side of the 4x4s and add 1x4s to the faces of the headers for style.

19. A new look for a tired wall—and storage, too—$43. Combine adjustable open shelves for handsome show-offs, and closed storage for hiding clutter. Louvered shutter serves as a door. Knot pine paneling above fireplace was stripped of its scalloped corner mold before it was painted white.

18. Easy-to-make steps for a grand entrance—$78. Four-foot-wide staggered steps of premixed concrete are colored with one pound of black dye per square yard. After concrete is troweled and almost ready to set up, remove wood forms and wash the concrete with a fine nozzle spray to expose aggregate.

20. An entry catch-all that serves family, saves clutter—$17. Here's departmentalized storage, seven feet long, to hold a world of family gear. Made of 1x10 lumber, the unit includes hooks for jackets and coats, cubbies for school books, sporting goods, and toys. Handy bench above the boot park is 18 inches deep.

Somebody had to break the rules.

Suddenly, you could have heard a pin drop on the sidewalk. Making its debut on Fifth Avenue was the world's first mini skirt.

The woman who wore it broke the rules, alright. And so did Dash.

We've created a breakthrough detergent for automatic washers. But to do it we had to break the rules.

Dash broke the rules to give you a cleaner wash.

The Rules

...and how Dash broke them.

Measure 1 1/4 cups per washload

Dash traded powder for power. You use only 3/4 cup of Dash where sudsing detergents recommend 1 1/4 cups. Concentrated fury.

Make lovely suds

Dash swapped excess suds (they can dull your wash) for clear, clean rinsing.

Be all things to all women.

a) Clean dishes, woodwork, tiles and tires, as well as clothes.

a) Dash is for laundry and only laundry.

b) Wash in a wringer and tub as well as machine.

21. Cork and curves for a wall—$53. Simple bookshelves get extra spice when surrounded by a wall of insulation cork panels and finished off with graceful arched tops. Fasten shelf uprights to the wall with metal angle brackets, install shelves on metal shelf strips. Make the arches from curved pieces of cork covered with wood grain paper. Glue the cork to the wall with tile mastic.

22. A unique kitchen exhaust—$10. You can build this imaginative hood from expanded metal lath covered with layers of plaster. Bend a piece of strap iron or cut a plywood curve to form the bottom edge of the hood, then form the metal lath around it. Fasten in place, then smooth on coats of plaster. When dry, put on a coat of sizing, then paint with enamel.

23. A sleek wall-hung buffet—\$28. You get a lot of buffet for very little money by building this way. First make simple $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch fir plywood boxes for the buffet units. Cover the boxes with wood-grain vinyl wallpaper, then install $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch hardboard sliding doors in aluminum track. Hang the units on the wall with long screws driven through the back into the wall studs.

24. Step-up planter for a slope—$18. Build a planter like this along a sloping driveway or a lot to direct rain runoff. Spike together rot-proofed Douglas fir 4x6s to make the step-up planter. Add border of river-washed pebbles to make a rain shed.

25. Double-duty screen panel—$31. This extra-wide screen panel neatly covers the radiator and bookshelf niche in the living room, but swings open to provide a pleasant cover-up for the dining area when needed. You build it by setting panels of filigree wood, hardboard, or plastic into a framework of hardwood strips. The extra panel of hardwood plywood across the bottom adds both strength and style. Hang with a sturdy continuous hinge.

26. A great little firepit deck—$35. Build this little 6 by 6 foot deck from redwood 2x6s held together with a couple of redwood 2x12s set in about six inches from each end. Cut a hole in the center and insert a big asbestos flowerpot or other fire container. Be sure to cut the hole a little bigger than the pot so the wood won't scorch. Add a couple of coats of exterior stain, and you're ready for a barbecue!

27. Seating and scenery for eating area—$35.

This simple treatment is a cheery invitation for kaffeeklatschers to gather round! To make the ceiling-high backdrop, cover a plywood panel with cotton batting and cotton plaid, then nail to the wall. For the bench, mount a 4-inch cushion, covered in the same plaid, on $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood—36 inches wide, 16 inches deep. Fasten to the wall with three 8-inch brackets at a height that brings the seat 18 inches from the floor. That colorful table is easy too. Cover the top with 12-inch-square center of laminated plastic. Then surround the square center with seven-inch bands of gray gold and an outside band in creamy gold (cut the same width). Or, you could achieve this same effect with several colors of paint or enamel.

28. Decorative division for a bath—under $25.

Plywood partition masks toilet from view and you don't have to be an expert to build it! Cut the mosque-shape opening (or any shape you fancy) in plywood; line inside with sheet aluminum. Then outline the opening with brilliant pink paint, or whatever color complements your bathroom. Build the partition framework from 2x4s. Cover with $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch plywood. Fasten a 1x4 to the wall with toggle bolts. Then slide edges of plywood partition over this board and secure in place with nails. Hide joints at wall, ceiling, and floor with pieces of molding.

29. Basic desk-shelf, window treatment—$64.

This cozy domain for homework in a child's room doesn't take long to complete. Build the simple framework for upright panels and shelves from 1x8-inch boards; nail or screw to wall. Add plywood fascia and arches after shelves are completed. Sturdy desk top is built from a hollow-core door. Shelves on two sides of the room hold prized possessions in the small corner area. For the simple window treatment, dip heavy fabric into a stiffening solution, then cut it to the size of the window. Tack or staple to shade rollers. Scallop the bottom edges.

30. Double-deck, triple-duty divider—$82.

Room divider between dining area and kitchen gives storage and service space, and adds interest to both rooms. To make the unit more serviceable, both upper and lower cabinets are accessible from either side.

Lower cabinet is made from pre-finished wood paneling measuring $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet long, 3 feet high, 1 foot deep. Counter top, covered with mosaic tiles, has a strip of chrome trim around the outer edge. Position the adjustable shelves to accommodate different heights of dinnerware pieces. Hanging cabinet to store glassware extends from steel bars by threaded rods covered with chrome tubing. Two plastic panels, 2 by 4 feet, serve as sliding doors.

31. A wall-wide headboard treatment—$55. Transform a bedroom with black and white fabrics, red Spanish light fixtures, and scroll-mounted wall tables. Cover wall sections with black felt and repeat in scalloped-edge cornice ornamented with black and white braid and yarn tassels. For bold contrast, backdrop the bed with white curtains that reach the floor. (Here the curtains conceal a small window.)

32. Arch-topped lath shade for patio—\$30. You'll find this beautifully designed shade as enjoyable to look at as to sit under. The redwood 2x4 framing members assemble easily to form sturdy, decorative support for arches made of $\frac{1}{4}$ x1 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch stock metal bars. Space 1x3 redwood slats two inches apart and secure from below with inch-long screws.

Project Plan 3707-2. To order, see page 120

33. The handsomest picnic table ever—$15. Your patio meals will take on a "going out to dinner" air when served on this parquet-topped table. Frame the 2x2 redwood slats that form the table and bench tops with 2x4s. Brace the table from below with bench supports attached to backs of the vertical supports that repeat the parquet motif of the top.

Project Plan 3707-3. To order, see page 120

34. A hutch one minute, a bar the next—$49. The base of this Italian-inspired hutch pulls out on casters to reveal beverage serving center. Hutch top, mounted on wall, is 40 inches high, 32 long, and 8 deep—base unit is 37 inches high, 36 long, 17 deep. Make both of plywood and 1x8 pine. Decorative features are of lattice, half-round and cove moldings.

35. Colorful family-room storage wall—$70. Pattern a wall with functional modules of storage spaces. Books, bric-a-brac, collector items, what have you—all add decorative interest to the wall. Doors cover some areas for handy concealed storage of less picturesque items. The unit shown is 12 feet wide, 8 feet high, and 18 inches deep, and is divided into mathematically precise cubicles.

Cut edging and framing from 1x12 pine shelving, the back and doors from $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch hardboard, and the shelves and dividers from $\frac{5}{8}$ -inch particle board. Choose and place colors carefully for the most striking effect.

36. A stepped-up planter retaining wall—$12. Railroad ties stack quickly into place (when a couple of strong backs are available). Price quoted is for a three-tier, eight-foot-long section. Fill ten-inch-wide pockets between ties with bedding plants—pink fibrous-rooted begonias are used here. Plant with seed for 50 cents or started plants for $6 to $8. Ties weather beautifully, need no maintenance.

37. Yards of storage—and a desk, too!—$89. Here's space to spare for books, special collections, or art objects. Desk area holds stationery supplies, and all is neatly hidden when desk is closed. Entire unit, 6-foot by 6-foot by 1-foot, hangs on the wall. Drawers are easy to install and convenient for sorting bills, or holding important papers, magazines, photographs, or hobby collections. To add decorative interest, paint the drawers different colors. Shelves are all adjustable. You can assemble the unit quickly with easy-to-work-with birch plywood. As a final touch, line desk area with white laminated plastic.

38. Beauty treatment for a faded kitchen—$66. To update old metal cabinets, chipped and worn, add 1½-inch moldings. (You can treat dull wooden cabinets in the same way.) Remove the old hardware, sand the surface, and glue moldings in place with epoxy or other suitable adhesive. If you use epoxy, pull masking tape tightly over the mitered corners, and in several places on each of the four pieces of molding. Let it dry overnight to set. Cover the existing hardware holes with the molding. You can vary the location of the molding to suit individual cabinets. Pick new locations for the antique pewter handles and knobs. Drill the holes with electric drill and steel bit. You could use wooden knobs, painted to match the cabinets. To complete the transformation, apply white undercoat plus antique glaze. To make the window shades, simply laminate fabric to new, heat-sensitive adhesive-backed window shade material, available in 42- and 68-inch widths. Install shades with reverse bracket hardware to conceal shade rollers.

39. Fun unlimited—and in limited space—$98. If there is no room left for expanding the children's play area, look up. There's plenty of space overhead for some of the best fun of all. This post-and-beam-framed haven keeps the little ones happy, well exercised, and at home. There is a little bit of everything for every youthful age: several swings, a basketball goal, a nice big tree house, chinning bar, and monkey bars. Set the 4x4 posts in concrete for extra strength and sandwich the upper framing beams around the posts. Nail 2x4s to posts to support the exterior-grade plywood floor of the house. Inset panels of perforated hardboard to form the half-wall of the "dwelling" and paint bright colors. Use galvanized pipe for long spans of monkey bars and ladder rungs. Mount basketball backboard, hang the big swing, and step back fast to avoid the stampede of neighborhood kids.

40. A dandy place for dishwasher—$62.34.

An empty wall space now houses not only the portable dishwasher but also dishes and hard-to-store party gear. The entire unit is made of ash core plywood to match kitchen cabinets. Hammered black handles and hinges make decorative accents. You can buy the standard-size cabinets from your kitchen cabinet dealer, or have them built by your carpenter. Garage for dishwasher is made of $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood. Twenty-four inches was allowed for depth of dishwasher and a 24-inch cabinet was added to fill wall space. Ceramic tile or other heat-resistant material provides a suitable counter top. For added convenience, you can install an electric warming tray in the counter. Upper cabinet is 12 inches deep; you could use two 24-inch cabinets or a 36-inch and 12-inch depending on storage needs. Warming lights for keeping food hot for serving could be installed under upper cabinet. Install an electrical outlet strip just above the counter for plugging in coffee maker and other appliances when serving buffets or at party time.

41. Tidy tool storage for a garage wall—$18.

You're sure to be a handier handyman with an efficient setup like this. The deep drawer pushes back into space under the stairs leading to a room over the garage. The shallow cupboard above can be any dimension you want; it's simply a matter of using the space between the studs for the shelves. Paint one side of cupboard and add shelves to accommodate miscellaneous supplies. You can use standards to make shelves adjustable to hold any size bottle or can. Line other side of cupboard with perforated hardboard so you can hang garden tools, handyman tools, and many odd-sized items. Install the storage drawer below with nylon rollers so it will roll in and out easily, regardless of the load inside. If you line the drawer with cedar, you can use it to store blankets and bedding. Stain and finish the whole storage unit to match the paneling and add decorative hardware.

42. Space saver for a space-age girl—$33.

This compact three-in-one unit (30 inches high x 20 inches deep by 8 inches long) does nonstop service in a small bedroom. It provides a desk, night table, vanity—and plenty of extra storage, too. To make one like it, you'll need a three-drawer unfinished, unassembled chest; a set of four spacers; two legs; scraps of lumber and plywood, and a 20 x 80-inch door—all available at your local lumber dealer's. In place of the door, you could substitute $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood for the entire top. Be sure to use bracing strips to reinforce and strengthen top. Then cover with laminated vinyl for an easy-care finish. Or, you could use adhesive-backed vinyl for a really fast job. Finally, paint the whole unit to coordinate with the colors in the bed coverlets.

43. Bedroom vanity and storage—$95. Turn your bedroom alcove or a section of wall into valuable storage space and gain a beauty bar in the process. The ceiling-high unit shown is 6½ feet wide and 2 feet deep—stock materials were used throughout to keep cost down. Decorative moldings and ornate doorknobs give a custom look for little extra cost.

45. A hideaway hobby room—$15. Just simple carpentry could make a family-room closet hold a music center, writing desk, games, and toys—all neatly concealed by existing closet doors when not in use. Fill closet from floor to ceiling with open shelves of varied dimensions—here upper section is 12 inches deep, the lower, 18. Use particle board faced with screen molding throughout. For a fine finish, you should stain, shellac, and varnish all surfaces.

46. Decorative patio addition—$52. Expand your patio with a strikingly patterned section composed of railroad ties, tree rounds, gravel, and concrete pads. Fill strategically placed voids with brightly foliaged and flowered plants. Price quoted is for an eight-foot-square section laid on a two-inch sand base. Use redwood 2x4s to divide area into modules of varied shapes and sizes. Creosote sides and bottoms of tree rounds.

47. Patio, table, two benches—$98. Here's a fancy 14-foot-square patio you can put down and furnish over a weekend. Start with a sheet of four-mil polyethylene spread over the patio area, space the two-foot concrete pads four inches apart, and fill voids with pebbles. Use pierced concrete blocks for table and bench legs (you need 14 half blocks). Pour your own concrete bench tops—be sure to stabilize with reinforcing rods. Make tabletop of 1x2 select cedar; brace from below with 1x4s.

48. Smart disguise for an air conditioner—$59.

As important as air conditioning has become to our daily lives, we must admit the units themselves add little to the appearance of any room. The solution? Camouflage their bulky shape with wood, fabric, or a decorative window shade. Here a storage unit does the job and also provides the room with architectural interest. Build a framework of lumber and fasten to wall with cleats. Install conditioner in center section and add shelves above and below. Hang three sets of pre-hinged louver-style shutters onto the frame. Shutter ensembles, complete with knobs and latches, are available at paint and hardware stores. Paint entire unit to harmonize with background, or stain to taste. For a special coordinated effect, substitute decorative insert panels and use fabric to match draperies or upholstery.

49. Compact curl-up bench for the patio—$34.

Sun worshipers and those who cling to the shade will welcome this contribution to lazy summertime lounging. It's simple to construct, too. Use 2x8s to build L-shaped bench and make it large enough to accommodate two 18x60-inch bench pads. Construct base of 2x8s and mount on 2x4s set on edge. Top storage end of bench with rectangular lid made of three 2x8s and hinge for easy access to pillows or small garden tools stored inside. Lid can also serve as a tabletop for quick snacks. For the final touch of color and comfort, add two polyurethane foam pads with bright, weather-resistant covers.

50. Lacy night stand to light a bedroom—$8.

Filigree panels diffuse light and give a very decorative effect to the bedroom. Octagonal-shaped stand (12-inches-wide by 23-inches-high) requires one piece of 3x4 filigree hardboard. Bevel slightly on vertical cut edges of each 4½-inch-wide panel to insure a better fit. Make base and top of 1x12s or ¾-inch plywood. Conceal edges of top and bottom with ¼x1½-inch rim. For stability, add a lead weight, painted white, to the base of the light fixture. Fasten light socket to base and mask low wattage bulb with angel hair to soften light. Cover top surface of stand with ceramic tile or a plastic laminate. Paint stand white or a pastel shade so it's easily seen in a darkened room.

51. Rugged shelves of rough-hewn wood—$25.

This ceiling-high bookcase unit will surprise you, it's so easy to build. Take rough-sawn 2x10s and distress with axe or chisel to get that weathered look. Then stain with dark walnut and seal with satin-finish varnish. Partially drive two 6-inch nails into the top of each upright. Remove tops of nails and ease into matching holes in the ceiling. Fasten 1x10 pine shelves with 3-inch lag screws. Irregularly spaced shelves make it possible to display books of various sizes together with art work, greenery, and a few choice collectibles.

52. A home phone booth from a closet—$32. This gives a teen-ager a serviceable sound barrier—but still, like the commercial versions, allows waiting outsiders to gesture angrily through the folding glass-paneled doors! You can convert this hideaway telephone cubicle with a minimum of effort, from a rarely used coat closet. Cover the interior walls with a brilliant allover printed paper—a discouragement to those who nervously pencil-doodle on walls. Attach a pint-sized school desk, retrieved from a junkyard, to the wall at a correct adult-knee height—with directly above, a message center (this one was concocted from an old Victorian frame nailed to a blackboard). To while away the minutes for someone waiting for a call, add a gold-painted overhead shelf to hold ornamental objects and a fine selection of reading matter, plus a pretty little light.

53. Fresh flora and fauna under glass!—$14. This inviting Eden of plants is housed under a cube of glass panes with a base of decorative cove molding. Make the base of the terrarium proper from 3½-inch decorative cove molding with the front two corners mitered into a graceful curve. For the back, which is flat so the unit will fit conveniently against wall, use ¾-inch pine; for the bottom, exterior-grade plywood. Paint the cove molding and back panel, which form a soil pocket for the plants, with fiber glass to make it waterproof. To plant the terrarium, fill the pocket with a combination of potting soil and charcoal flakes to a depth of 3 inches. Add decorative rocks and moss for a jungle effect. The plants shown here include dwarf palm, grape ivy, and dracaena. The glass cube cover is formed with double-strength glass panes 16 inches high, 18 inches wide, and 10 inches deep. To seal the edges, use clear aquarium sealant.

54. Spectacular entrance "lighthouse"—$15. Here's how to get illumination for the driveway and an impressive sculptured lawn accent at the same time. Oblong wooden light "cage" measures just 7¾ inches square by 30 inches high. To construct this unusual light, saw ½-inch x 6-inch cedar paneling (soffit or redwood may be used) into ¼-inch x ¾-inch strips. Nail together 4-inch-wide pieces of the same material to make a 6¼-inch square to be used for the bottom sections—allowing an overlap of 2 inches at the top and 8 inches at the bottom. Corner strips should be approximately 40 inches long so they can be buried in the ground. Add filler pieces at bottom for extra rigidity. Install waterproof light socket in the base. Cut an 8-inch-square wood top with a pull for easy removal of lid when light is changed. Use a plastic-covered underground cable to connect outdoor light with electrical outlet. For safety, be sure to use a permanently molded and grounded three-pronged plug.

55. Stained-glass effect fence—$97. This colorful and airy fence affords privacy for a patio (or garden area) without cutting off light or restricting air circulation. The staggered redwood frames filled with fiber glass panels are connected with alternating louver-fitted frames. You make frame holding the fiber glass with 4x4-inch uprights and 2x4s at top and bottom. Groove each piece of the redwood framework in the center to accept the fiber glass panels. Make notches in the outside frame to hold the 1x2-inch redwood members. Then fit fiber glass panels to the grooves. Alternate small frames at right angles are 18-inches wide and hold 2x3-inch louvers.

56. Treasure of a music center in a trunk—$96. When Grandmother packed her trunk, it never held surprises like these! The antique metal trunk shown here, braced with wood and metal, now provides a tasteful home for a record changer, an FM tuner, an amplifier, and a clock radio. A hidden wire connects the speakers which are located in another part of the room. The exterior metal was antiqued and the wood stained and waxed to maintain the old look. The interior surface is lined with gold cotton velvet. Open or shut, the refurbished trunk makes a talented musical addition to any room in the house. And for an extra advantage, a large padlock can be added to keep sticky young fingers from gumming up the works!

57. Book-bedecked folding doors—$18. Acres of books and not a best seller in the bunch—because all these tomes hidden behind sumptuous grillwork are, in reality, a bookcase-motif-wallpaper. The dramatic den-bedroom has one wall completely devoted to doors—center folding ones conceal wide closets, black doors at either side lead to hall and bath. Instead of a liability, they become an asset when the end ones are painted black, and the wide expanse of center doors are given this arresting wallpaper facade, thus becoming an important part of the decor. Red felt side draperies stitched with black grosgrain ribbon and a brilliant carmine wood-grained wallpaper on the walls echo the bold and bedazzling color scheme.

58. "Ideal-working-conditions" center—$60. And what could be more ideal for figuring out the household budget than the desk of this airy unit? It's located in a quiet corner of the living room, well away from the main traffic pattern. The built-in grouping consists of a commodious desk with plenty of work space for shuffling papers, a filing cabinet, storage units, and ceiling-high shelves. These shelves hold books, a changeable display of paintings (the upright dividers serve as handsome frames for the artwork), and a variety of big-scale bibelots. Various woods—pine, hemlock, and plywood—were hammered and stained to give a weathered, Spanish-texture effect, and to blend the entire unit into the rest of the room.

59. Big wall treatment for little room—$20. You can visually expand a room by patterning one wall. This 8x8-foot wall gains new dimension from six 72x15½-inch plywood grilles (available at lumberyards) tacked in place with small finishing nails over a white wall area.

To carry out the black and white theme, the table and chairs were painted black and the tabletop covered with marbleized self-adhesive paper.

60. A compact wall-hung sewing center—$33. With this unit tucked neatly into a corner, all your sewing needs are ready for use at a moment's notice. Sewing equipment and supplies are quickly accessible from the ample cabinets—sewing machine swings under the counter top when not in use. Spool rack on counter at right is the front panel which hides the machine when it is in the down position.

There is ample work surface for most sewing needs. Legless cabinets of ¾-inch plywood allow quick floor cleanup after sewing spree.

61. Built-in library and storage panels—$37. Here's a beautiful way to break up an 18-foot expanse of wall and gain valuable storage space in the process. These 16-inch-deep units are five feet wide and spaced to accommodate the width of the couch. The boxed end panels (¾-inch plywood over 2x4 frames) give an important architectural line to the room.

The section at left provides space for an electric organ in place of low storage cabinets below shelves in matching unit at right.

62. Redwood and canvas privacy screen—$73. To form this 6-foot-high, 12-foot long screen, stretch canvas replacement covers for garden reclining chairs within sturdy 4x4 redwood frame. You can cut the price to under $50 if you use fir lumber.

Canvases have metal eyelets set along their borders—lacing cord is included in kit. String cord through eyelets and loop over hooks screwed into sides of 4x4s. Here a mound of fibrous-rooted begonias skirts base of screen.

63. A colorful overhead sun screen—$98. Here's a glamorous way to keep the midday sun off your patio or garden dining area. Loop canvas strips over roof slats spaced a foot apart, to form a bright and airy "ceiling." The open spaces between the canvases permit heat to escape.

The beautiful simplicity of the framework adds to the effectiveness of the 12-foot-square, eight-foot-tall structure. Two 2x8 boards separated by spacers form the posts and sandwich around 2x10 overhead beams. The two center beams rest on 2x8 cross beams nailed to posts to complete the structure.

64. Clever camouflage for a freezer—\$33. Here's an L-shaped screen you simply build onto the end of a wall. The 5-foot extension has a 3-foot boot to enclose an area on the other side. Build the main section from $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch hardboard, the end portion from $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch perforated hardboard. Here, the perforated hardboard lets air circulate behind an upright freezer. Paint both sections of the screen to match the wall. For shelving, buy 70 feet of 1x4s, cut to desired lengths, and install.

65. New plastic sparkle for a stairwell—$75. Dull, dead space around a stairwell comes alive in no time when surrounded with colorful plastic panels like these. Buy panels that suit your taste and space requirements; groove and stain 1x2s for frames.

66. Storage stretcher for a small bath—$7. Bathrooms are often short on hanging space for towels and flat space for toiletries. Here's a quick and inexpensive solution to the problem. Select any size shelf you wish, attach it with brackets and L-bars, then mount a decorative wooden curtain rod underneath.

67. A very versatile patio protector—$74. This screen blocks the sun and wind—and the neighbors' view of your patio. The benches are also part of the project; they make a family gathering place, cut down the need for extra furniture when you entertain outside. Frame the screen with 2x4s and 4x4 posts set in concrete; complete with 1x4s scalloped at the top. Treat all wood surfaces with preservative sealer and stain. (Posts should be treated before you set them.) Buy galvanized pipe and flanges to make the legs of the benches.

68. A sandbox that helps landscaping—$19. Here is one way you can do both your children and your backyard a big favor. This long, rectangular sandbox accommodates several members of the sandpail set, makes a neat, low-maintenance border across the backyard. To make your own, begin by covering the area you've selected with a sheet of polyethylene film to suppress grass and weeds. Then border the area with used bricks and fill with sand.

69. Entertaining solution to idle walls—\$89. The walls flanking this doorway between a living room and a small den behind used to just stand there. Now they display books and collections on the shelves above, conceal stereo equipment in the cabinets below. To make your own, divide the wall into four major sections with $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch particle board painted white. Build the stereo cabinets in at the bottom; put soffits with translucent plastic panels across the top. Stain to match. Fit the spaces between the soffits and the stereo cabinets with adjustable glass shelves and back-the shelves with felt. You can build a similar unit on the other side for a library if you need more space.

70. Lighting valance to brighten a bath—$12.

You can assemble a handsome lighting valance like this in a matter of minutes—and you don't even need special tools to do the job. To shield bare bulbs or fluorescent fixtures above wash basin, cut a 1x6-inch board to fit your wall. Size end brackets same height as face board and 2 inches longer than light bulb projection. This spreads light and safeguards valance finish from heat. Glue and nail brackets for support at both ends and every 4 feet (or between the fixtures).

If you want more light in your bathroom than you presently have, wire several incandescent, ceramic fixtures in a series, then tap into an existing socket. If you select fluorescent units, be sure you specify warm white tubes. Convenient, rapid-start ballasts are both inexpensive and readily available today.

71. Versatile, freestanding room divider—$17.

A handsome addition to any room. You can use it to hide a closet, create an inviting entry or make one room do double duty. Easy to make. Those "rosewood" panels are actually realistically patterned, adhesive-backed vinyl smoothed over both sides of three 1/4-inch hardboard sheets, 16 inches wide, 60 inches long. It's best to select tempered hardboard, smooth on both sides.

Simply slip hardboard panels into ready-made 1x2-inch hardboard stops, painted a flat or lacquered black. Stops, 5 feet 2 inches long, extend 1 inch beyond vinyl-covered hardboard.

Next, glue and nail side rails of 1x4-inch lumber. These black-painted rails are 6 feet 2 inches long—the extra length adds distinction.

You can assemble as many panels as you want by mounting three double-action hinges between each. Now you're ready to enjoy this adaptable, smart-set screen.

72. "Things" shelf that lights up, too—$28.

Looking for more shelf space? Here's your answer with a built-in look and built-in lights! The concealed wall lights save table space, serve beds and desk. Glass or plastic shelf on top lets light flow up the wall as well as down.

Wall-mount the fluorescent fixtures. Center each where you want maximum light. To reduce eyestrain over study desk, face board should start 14 inches above the desk top. For best light, use warm white tubes of maximum wattage; 40-watt ballasts fit 48-inch space; 30-watt need 36 inches. Separate switches on each light provide flexible control.

Make face board and support brackets of 1x6 lumber, sized to fit your space. Stop about 6 inches short of windows.

For easy cleaning, be sure top shelf is flush with face board; rabbet one edge of board; or rest glass on narrow slats glued and nailed to wall and back side of face board.

Project Plan 3707-11. To order, see page 120

73. Removable rock 'n cork-paneled wall—$38. You can add texture and uniqueness to a run-of-the-mill room with alternating panels of rock and cork. Here's how: This 8x7-foot wall uses two pieces of 1/4-inch plywood cut down the center. Glue and nail 1/2-inch frame around each plywood section. For frame, recess 1x2-inch lumber around edge, add three cross-pieces in center for support. Paint flat face of each panel black. Lay painted face up on flat surface to mount gravel or riverbed rock, using transparent, waterproof glue.

Attach horizontal furring strips to existing wall surface. Screw panels to furring strips with angle brackets. Slide 15x4x1-inch cork blocks between rock panels to fill space and provide interesting texture variation.

74. Portable A-frame playhouse-climber—$86. This colorful playhouse needs only your child's active imagination to convert it into a tepee, clubhouse, beachhouse, or mountain for climbing. Sturdily built of 2x2s and outdoor plywood, the entire house can be lifted and moved if grass around it turns into a mud area from the heavy traffic it's sure to attract.

Roof overhang permits good lighting and ventilation, yet keeps out rain. Plastic-coated canvas provides privacy for club-meeting huddles. Its generous size, 6x8 feet, 6 feet tall, sleeps three in comfort. Just add sleeping bags, blankets, or a couple of foam-rubber mattress pads for luxurious living.

Project Plan 3707-12. To order, see page 120

75. Dowel-top table converts to bench—$10. Here's a table as versatile as it is good-looking! This imaginative use of 3/8-inch dowels for top and sides makes it a real eye-stopper; it also makes it a resilient sit-upon with or without a cushion.

One-inch square walnut frame is grooved to receive painted dowels. Table, 20x24 inches, is 14 inches tall—just right for an end table. Or build two and use, as shown here, to support an 8-foot long walnut plank.

76. Rustic, easy-to-build planter boxes—$21. You can get summer-long pleasure from planters filled with colorful blooms such as these vivid pink May-time petunias—ideal for a sunny location. The three boxes shown here fit around a basement light well and serve as a safety railing, too.

Use pressure-treated Douglas fir lumber to resist moisture and decay. Sides, bottom, and ends are cut from 2x4s secured with cleats or angle irons at the joints. For rigidity, add inside cleats across the bottom spaced about every two feet. Leave unfinished or stain to match deck. It's wise to first position a long box like this eight-foot one before filling with planting soil mixture. Coarse gravel or crushed clay pottery in bottom aid drainage.

77. Bedside built-in for two—$59. Here's a different way to handle twin beds in a smallish room. The shelves hold hundreds of items, and they free floor space for a sitting area.

Materials include $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood, hardboard, trim-strips, paint, a window shade, and fabric to cover it. The unit measures seven feet high, 12 feet wide, and one foot deep.

78. Trundle sandbox-playhouse—$65. This fun unit does three jobs at once: it's a playhouse, sandbox, and roomy slide-away toy chest.

Build it with redwood and pine lumber. You'll also need heavy-duty casters, sheet metal for the bottom, and a secondhand venetian blind. Cost does not include the beamed screen overhead; it's part of the patio.

Project Plan 3707-14. To order, see page 120

79. Portable patio screens—$9 each. These bamboo shades provide privacy and protection against harsh sunlight; you can easily remove them for storage or a more open look.

Make the frames of 2x2-inch redwood and install spring plungers at the tops to hold them against the ceiling. Secure matchstick bamboo shades to the frames with screen molding.

80. Brick bench and planter—$43. Build the L-shaped base out of used brick on a concrete footing. This one is 15 feet long and two feet wide, with a seven-foot leg at one end. For the top, tie redwood 2x6s together with cleats, and set in place.

81. Stained-glass window grille—\$18. Blank out a lackluster view or an odd window with $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch-square pine and random-sized pieces of glass.

Cut the pine into strips and random-length blocks for spacers, then glue and nail them together. Glue in the glass, stain or paint, and attach to the wall with wooden hangers.

82. Bookcase, bar, and storage—$40. Just 28 inches of wall space accommodates this triple-duty unit. Behind there's a tall, thin closet for an ironing board or mops.

You can make the built-in with $\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch plywood, dressed up with paneling. First, frame everything together with butt joints, then nail to cleats on the wall.

83. Most-honorable play pagoda—about $90. Bring the Far East to your backyard with this children's teahouse. The kids can furnish it with paper oriental accessories and hold court all summer long; in winter it makes a stylish shed for patio furniture and garden gear.

You can build the teahouse with plywood, common lumber, and corrugated aluminum roofing, painted Chinese red, of course. Dimensions are 6x4x6 feet high at the roof's peak.

To make that circular window, just nail up three strips of pine and back them with fiber glass screening; another window in the rear provides cross-ventilation.

84. A fence you can walk right through—$63. This rugged privacy screen completely hides an entry court, yet there's no gate to obstruct your approach to the house.

Build the two offset sections with redwood or rough-sawn cedar. Screw parallel strips of scrap iron to each of the 4x4-inch posts, then set the irons in the concrete.

After the posts are up, the job is simple carpentry. Connect the posts with 2x4s; nail those six-inch-wide slats to the 2x4s. Trim one side of each slat with a 1x2-inch board for a more finished look.

85. Elegance for an ordinary window—$44. Wider trim, a monochromatic color scheme, and floor-length draperies made a dramatic change in the proportions of this small corner window.

The new trim consists of five-inch-wide lumber, edged with cove molding. Both the old and new frames were painted a neutral putty color, then the molding was matched to the ceiling cove with a darker value of the same tone.

White batiste curtains blend the window with the wall below it. Simple, straight draperies, edged in white, hang from a wooden rod.

86. A different way to divide a room—$95. This bedroom built-in works two ways. The perforated hardboard partition behind the desk defines study and sleeping areas; a second partition—perpendicular to the desk—separates the beds and serves as a common headboard.

To build the unit, you'll need six 4x8-foot sheets of hardboard, 2x4s for the studs, plywood and laminated plastic for the desk top, and an unfinished chest.

87. Tuck-away toy table for toddlers—$29. It's also a sturdy bench, and the carts can be assembled into a train. Make everything from three sheets of 3/4-inch plywood.

The carts are open-topped cubes, 16 inches on each side. Cut out the handholes with a coping saw. For the 68-inch-long table, use the plywood double thickness. Sand, seal, and paint with good enamel.

88. Cover-up for an unsightly fireplace—$24.

Update an old fireplace and make it a really decorative accent this way. Begin by stripping off the old mantel and as much other structure as possible. Then add a new fir plywood face, building out a wood framework at the ends of the old fireplace as much as necessary. Line the inside of the new opening with aluminum angle. Build a new hearth from plywood with a quarry tile surface. Hang the new hearth along the front of the fireplace with metal angle brackets. Make a new mantel from plywood covered with wood grain plastic laminate and fasten to the top of the plywood facing. Finish with sealer and two coats of enamel.

89. Another cover-up, for backyards—$28.

Create an enclosed space for your garbage cans, garden hose, and other necessary but unattractive bits of outdoor equipment by building this little service yard on the back of your garage. Set 2x4 posts in the ground, then build 2x4 frames to nail to them. Fill the frames with 1x4 boards, nailed to 1x1 nailing strips set inside the frames. Weathered redwood was used here, but you could use salvaged lumber. Pea gravel with some steppingstones set in defines the area and makes a rugged floor.

90. Walnut case for an old television set—$46.

If you have an old TV that still works but leaves a little to be desired in looks, turn it into a smart new piece of furniture with a case like this. You build a big cube from walnut plywood and make it mobile with a set of carpet casters. Close the doors when you're not viewing and roll the set out of the way.

91. A private and very practical patio—$68.

The artful use of concrete slabs with sections of gravel, combined with an inexpensive but good-looking privacy screen, lets you create a delightful 11-by-30-foot patio at a very low cost. Part of the secret is to decide just how much space you really need in solid concrete, then divide this minimum space with redwood 2x4s to make pleasant small areas. Carry out your pattern with 2x4s and gravel over the rest of the area, leaving enough borders for planting. The privacy screen is easy to build. You put up a framework of 4x4 posts set about 3 feet deep without concrete, with 2x4s for cross members. Space the cross members so you can nail on two rows of snow fencing to get sufficient height. Since you can buy wire-bound fencing already stained, you need only stain the fence framework to match before nailing on the fencing. Be sure to use galvanized nails to prevent unsightly rust marks later. Nail the fencing on one side of the framework; then, for more privacy, arrange the fencing on the other side so the slats oppose the openings on the fencing already installed.

92. Work-of-art candelabrum for a wall—$14.

This candelabrum combines the look of modern sculpture with the charm of candlelight to add a new visual dimension to your entertaining. The little votive candles in their colored glass containers are inexpensive and provide about six hours' light each. You construct the candelabrum frame from lengths of $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch square aluminum bar stock. Cut random pieces with a hacksaw, lay them out in a pleasing pattern, then fasten the joints with self-tapping metal screws put in from the back. Use epoxy resin cement to glue on plastic coasters to hold the candles. Spray the whole thing flat black, then hang with metal angle brackets.

93. Stack-up hi-fi and record cabinets—$65. Here's a wonderful system for housing hi-fi components, and it's especially easy and economical to build. You start with one sheet of hardwood plywood, ripping it into three 16-inch-wide strips lengthwise. You can make one box 16 inches deep, 16 inches high, and 30 inches long from each strip. Miter the joints at the top edges of the boxes and put the bottoms in with butt joints. Nail perforated hardboard on for the backs, and install hardboard sliding doors. You can groove the tops and bottoms of the boxes for the doors before assembling, or simply install aluminum track afterward. Nail matching hardwood molding to the front edges of the boxes to cover the plywood edges. Nail in wood cleats across the back edge of each box top so you can drive screws through the cleats into wall studs for hanging. Make simple 1x2 wood frames to go between the boxes to separate them and give them a floating look.

94. Distinctive privacy screen and gate—$48. Rough sawn boards give a special look to this basically simple fence design. Imaginative use of common dimension lumber in the gate completes the effectiveness of the privacy screen. You build the fence sections on a framework of 4x4 posts with 2x4 cross members top and bottom. Set the posts in concrete, or just bury them in the ground about three feet deep. If you use posts other than redwood, be sure they're treated against rot. When the posts are placed, nail on the top 2x4 rails, then saw shallow dadoes near the bottoms of the posts to receive the bottom rails. Nail the rough sawn 1x4-inch boards on both sides of the fence, spacing them about two inches apart. Be sure to stain the framework and the inside surface of the boards before nailing them on. Build the gate from lengths of 2x4, spacing the uprights the width of one 2x4 apart. Your gate will be much sturdier if you cut shallow dadoes in the top and bottom bars for the uprights to fit in. Nail in short lengths of 2x4 laid flat between the uprights to create an interesting pattern. Hang the gate with heavy butt hinges and stain to match the rest of the fence.

95. Convenient tilt-out drawer for spices—\$3. Puts a full spice selection at your fingertips. Remove false drawer front under kitchen range. Add a bottom and back of $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch plywood. Be sure to round off top of triangular-shaped end pieces so they will clear the opening. Insert a 2x2-inch wooden peg at each end of drawer to prevent it from falling too far forward.

96. Fashionable face-lift for a tired desk—$4. Don't give that beat-up desk and chair to the junk dealer. Give them a second look—and perhaps a second life. Paint chair frame and desk with a satin-finish enamel. Then glue a piece of black felt to the desk top and contrast with a zingy print on drawer fronts. Cover chair cushion and telephone book in matching print. Add some handsome hardware, and you have the nucleus of a distinctive home office.

97. A real gem of a hanging jewelry case—\$8. No more frustrating moments searching for a particular piece of jewelry in a cluttered dresser drawer. This 23x26 $\frac{1}{2}$ x3-inch wall-mounted box has a place for everything—bracelets, necklaces, pins, earrings. Construct base of $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch plywood and divide space into compartments with hardboard or $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch plywood. Line cubicles and door backs with black felt. Install magnetic door latches to insure a tight closing.

98. A many-splendored glass tile globe—$23. An elegant example of a glassblower's art? Not at all. Just a simple light fixture you can make yourself. To begin, take a glass (or plastic) globe, available in electrical supply and lamp stores, and apply mosaic glass tiles to the surface using white glue as the adhesive. Four square feet of tile was used to cover this 12-inch diameter globe. Mosaic tiles are sold at hobby shops and building supply stores.

99. Versatile wooden window bench—\$39.50. A very practical piece you can use in many ways—for extra seating, as a coffee table, a planter table. Build a basic box from $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch plywood to fit your own space requirements and set on four short legs. Apply parquet flooring, pre-finished or unfinished, to the surface with floor mastic. If you construct the box with a hinged top, you can also use it for storage purposes.

100. See-through divider for an entry—$65. This unique divider has a split personality. It screens incoming-outgoing traffic from the living room beyond, yet allows an uninterrupted flow of light and air. Attach mahogany panel and post unit to ceiling with screws set into end posts and inserted into pre-drilled ceiling holes. Secure to the floor in a similar manner. String wooden and glass beads between panels and fasten to hooks at top of divider frame. Let the beads fall free to the bottom to emphasize the light, airy look.

SUMMERTIME EATING

MEALS THAT TAKE THE SIMMER OUT OF SUMMER

By Rita Holmberg, Foods Editor

If you're like us, you're convinced that "lagging summer appetites" are completely mythical! With increased outdoor activity, fresh air, and sunshine as heady appetizers, your family's interest in food really hits a peak. Here on the following pages we'll show you the easy, sure way to satisfy that interest—and still have time to enjoy summer yourself!

What better choice for an automatic mealtime success than a handsome center-cut Gingered Ham Slice like this! You marinate the ham in a mixture of ginger ale and orange juice, zipped up with ginger and cloves. Then use the marinade as a brush-on as the ham slice broils to perfection over the coals or in your broiler.

To serve with the smoky-flavored ham, you make Hot Deviled Potatoes from convenient instant mashed potatoes. Why not spoon them into small foil baking shells for easy serving? (You can buy the shells at your grocer's or shape your own from a piece of foil.) They'll keep warm on the grill while the meat is cooking. You might even mix the potatoes and fill the shells ahead, then refrigerate, allowing extra time for heating.

And to make the wait seem shorter, offer Zesty Zucchini Dip with crisp vegetable dippers. It's a blender special made with zucchini, cooked in seasoned tomato juice, with cream cheese, and bacon. You do the Pickled Shrimp ahead, of course, then skewer them with green pepper squares and pineapple chunks.

For a sweet finale: Peach Crumble, a pudding parfait that's alternately smooth and crunchy. The crunch comes from a baked sugar-egg-walnut mixture you crumble and layer with the creamy pudding. (An instant mix shortcuts the pudding for you.) Make these in the morning; they wait nicely in the refrigerator till dinnertime.

A PERFECT SUMMER DINNER

Take a tip from the cucumber and play it cool with this Poached Salmon Platter! No trick at all when you poach the salmon steaks early in the morning, chill them till mealtime, then serve on a bed of shredded iceberg lettuce. Wonderful with Cucumber Sauce, also well-chilled. And, by all means, with generous wedges of juicy lemon. To complete the menu: Vegetable-stuffed Tomatoes, hot Bread 'n Butter Sticks, Ruby Fruit Compote, and Spiced Iced Tea.

What better summer eating bonus than red, juicy tomatoes—unless it would be Vegetable-stuffed Tomatoes. You hollow out the beauties, drain and chill them well, then stuff them with a combination of Italian green beans, sliced mushrooms, and green onions marinated in bottled Italian salad dressing. (Another do-ahead, to cut last-minute meal preparation to a minimum.) You whip up those crunchy Bread 'n Butter Sticks in next to no time—from packaged biscuit mix—serve hot from the oven, for a pleasant contrast to this cool meal.

You'll count this Ruby Fruit Compote a real favorite on your list of summertime (and anytime!) desserts, and for three good reasons. First, it's a do-ahead, and second, a delightfully easy one. You simply combine frozen cherries, frozen raspberries, and fresh strawberries, in a lemon-sparked sauce made by thickening the juices of the first two. After you chill the compote thoroughly, spoon into sherbets, top with a dollop of sour cream. Garnish with whole strawberries. The third reason?—Well, just taste this compote!

LAZY-DAY LUNCHEON

Turkey-Asparagus Open-facers—a smart idea for your next luncheon. For attractive, even slices, just fix one of the handy frozen turkey roasts the day before. Especially nice with Western Fruit Salad with Ginger Cream Dressing, and Double-Nut Chocolate Sundae Cups.

Crisp greens; slices of sweet, juicy peaches or nectarines; beautiful red raspberries, and plump blueberries—what better way to spell summer! And to spell it with a capital "S," serve this Western Fruit Salad with Ginger Cream Dressing. You make the dressing by blending juice from the lightly sugared peaches with lemon juice, ginger, cream cheese, and a little milk—simple? To create your own salad variations, how about sliced Bartlett pears (canned ones, later on), some sweet cherries, strawberries, or melon balls?

Another scrumptious dessert to do ahead, assemble at the last minute, and earn a reputation on—Double-Nut Chocolate Sundae Cups! Make the "cups" from chocolate fudge-flavored whipped dessert mix and chopped pecans, then freeze them. The luscious Butter-Pecan Sauce you also do ahead, to spoon over the ice-cream-filled chocolate cups. We used vanilla, but you'll love coffee ice cream, too. Another time, make cups from strawberry-flavored whipped dessert mix, fill with pineapple sherbet, and top with sweetened berries.

A FIESTA ANYTIME

Almost as much fun as a holiday in Mexico, this luncheon or supper you build around our colorful Salad Con Carne! And it doesn't keep you in the kitchen all day long. For the salad, you slightly thicken seasoned, skillet-browned ground beef, spoon it over the salad ingredients—lettuce, onion, tomato, green pepper, ripe olives, and shredded cheddar—and top with crunchy corn chips. Offer crusty rolls with the salad, and an Assorted Relish Tray which includes Guacamole and Summer Corn Relish. For dessert, Coffee Chiffon Pie which you made in the cool of the morning.

Carry out your south-of-the-border theme with flavorful Guacamole, to eat, Mexican-style, as a go-along with the Salad Con Carne. Or, offer the creamy avocado mixture as a dip, with corn chips or fried quartered tortillas for dunking. Brighten the meal with Summer Corn Relish, a marvelously seasoned mix of garden goodness: corn, cabbage, onion, tomato, and cucumber. (Our recipe makes three pints, so you'll also be able to brighten other meals later on.) Round out your relish tray with chili peppers, ripe olives, and green onions.

Perfect ending to your meal 'is light, cool, and elegant Coffee Chiffon Pie. Your family will love the subtle accent of nutmeg, the bittersweet garnish of chocolate curls atop the wreath of fluffy whipped cream. But most of all, you'll love the shortcuts to preparing this make-ahead dessert—the packaged pastry mix for the flaky pie shell, the instant coffee powder you blend right in with other dry ingredients. For a special party, you might want to bake glamorous little individual tarts, or fancy up the crust with chopped toasted almonds.

EVER HEAR OF COUCHING?

By Margo Garrity, Crafts and Home Sewing Editor

Even if you've never embroidered before, you can master couching in no time! You simply draw with yarn, then attach yarn to fabric at even intervals with a second thread—usually with the same color, in a mercerized weight.

Couching can be done freehand by letting the yarn fall onto the fabric. Use a darning or tapestry needle to thread the yarn. A long embroidery needle works best for the mercerized thread.

Pull the yarn through from the back side of the fabric, then arrange on the top until you achieve the desired pattern—a loop, a leaf shape, or a long straight line, as in the house shown above. Bring the mercerized thread through from the back side of the fabric right next to the yarn; then draw both yarn and thread through to the back.

A simple whip stitch which goes at an angle following the twist of the yarn can be almost completely concealed. If the attaching stitch runs at right angles, it becomes a bit more obvious, thus more decorative.

The only limitation for couching is the material used. On wools or non-washable fabrics, use wool yarns. On cottons or washable fabrics, cotton yarn or embroidery thread works best. When couching is finished, place the design face down on an ironing board and press.

You can use the finished piece as a wall hanging, a chair back, a window valance or you can make it into a top for a pillow.

Victorian house: On woven striped wool fabric, couch larger areas of house and roof first, letting long lines be one stitch with yarn. Tack these down as you go and finish small areas first, then proceed to the small areas. Example: finish roof before beginning shingle pattern.

Fish: Outline the large form first on duck cloth or lightweight canvas. Next, do fins, then scales and

CHICKEN OVER THE COALS

By Patricia Dittberner, Associate Foods Editor

Broiled in a basket, roasted whole on a spit, or cooked slowly right on the grill—barbecued chicken makes superb summer eating. Especially when you add a really special glaze, as we did here.

Mustard Chicken Barbecue

Try this tangy sauce on oven-broiled chicken, too—

- ¼ cup Dijon-style mustard
- 3 tablespoons light molasses
- 3 tablespoons vinegar
- 4 teaspoons Worcestershire sauce

Dash thyme

8 chicken parts (legs and thighs)

Combine mustard and molasses; stir in vinegar, Worcestershire sauce, and thyme; blend well. Place chicken parts in hinged wire barbecue basket. Broil over medium coals for 1 to 1¼ hours or till chicken is tender, turning occasionally. Brush with sauce frequently during last 30 minutes of cooking. Makes 4 servings.

Orange Broiled Chicken

Zippy seasonings come from Italian salad dressing mix—

- ⅔ cup cooking oil
- ½ cup orange marmalade
- ¼ cup red wine vinegar
- 2 tablespoons water
- 2 teaspoons ground ginger
- 1 envelope Italian salad dressing mix
- 2 broiler-fryers, 2 to 2½ pounds each, halved lengthwise

In blender container or screw-top jar, combine oil, marmalade, vinegar, water, ginger, and salad dressing mix. Cover tightly; blend or shake till well mixed. Place chicken, skin side down, on grill; brush with additional cooking oil. Cook over low coals for 25 to 30 minutes. Turn; broil 20 minutes more. Brush with the orange sauce. Continue broiling for 10 to 15 minutes or till tender, turning occasionally and brushing with sauce. Makes 4 servings.

Herbed Rotisserie Chicken

Delectable herb-glazed birds—fit for any feast—

- 2 whole broiler-fryers, about 2 pounds each
- ½ cup cooking oil
- ¼ cup light corn syrup
- ¼ cup finely chopped onion
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon oregano, crushed
- 1 teaspoon caraway seed
- ½ teaspoon salt

To mount birds on spit: Fasten neck skin to back with nail or skewer. To tie wings, use a 24-inch cord. Slip cord under back of chicken; bring ends of cord to front, looping around each wing tip. Tie in center of breast so wings can't straighten, leaving equal cord ends.

Place holding fork on rod, tines toward point. Insert rod through bird, pressing tines of holding fork firmly into breast meat. Take an 18-inch cord; loop around tail, then around crossed legs. Tie very tightly to hold bird securely on spit, leaving cord ends. Pull together cords attached to wings and legs; tie tightly. Add another holding fork, tines toward point of spit; press tines into breast meat of second bird. Tie as above. Add third holding fork, pressing tines into meat. Test balance.

For sauce: combine oil, corn syrup, onion, lemon juice, oregano, caraway seed, and salt; mix well.

To grill: Attach spit to rotisserie; roast over medium-hot coals for 1½ to 1¾ hours with barbecue hood lowered or 2 hours on open grill. Brush with sauce frequently during last 30 minutes of roasting. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

There's a lot to be said about a Sunkist orange besides its Vitamin C, its easy-open package and its natural goodness. It's the most refreshing health-builder you can give to your family. Brimming with tangy, golden juice. Bright and sparkling as sunshine. And each one has been inspected over and

HOW A LITTLE OLD KITCHEN BECAME A BIG SUCCESS

Photograph: Hopkins. Designer: Logan & Logan. Decorator: Don Popplestone, Staff Design

Just everything was wrong with the kitchen in the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Graham. As a leftover from the mid-'20s, it had too little storage and work space; no place to feed a family of three growing boys; a worn-through floor; jammed up appliances. No matter how many coats of brightly colored paint were applied, the kitchen still had a dreary, early-awful look.

Here's how the Grahams made everything right. The cramped built-in benches and table that cut the work space through the middle were replaced with a long expanse of counter and efficient storage. Now, the sink and dishwasher are centered below the handsome bay windows which were left unchanged. For economical exhaust fan venting, the range was installed on an adjacent outside wall (facing the garage). This also neatly eliminated two eyesores: the pipe-legged sink and a pair of peek-aboo barn-sash windows.

With the refrigerator now moved to the dining room wall, a generous $9\frac{1}{2} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$ eating area is left from the original $13\frac{1}{2} \times 9\frac{1}{2}$ room. When the table is used for family meals, one end is placed against the wall—or the table can be pulled out to seat six to eight.

Mazola, used in place of the more saturated fats, is a simply delicious way to help balance the fats in your diet with polyunsaturates.

You can't squeeze or smell or taste a ham-in-a-can before you spend good money for it.

And that's precisely why we put a big Golden Star on the front of our can. Inside is the only ham that's made only from the filet of fine smoked hams ... the very tenderest ... the small bit of the ham that grows up naturally without tough muscle, stringy gristle or useless fat.

Now that you know about Golden Star, you need never be disappointed in a canned ham ever again.

Delightful Dutch garden blooms with brilliance in the center of a party table! Windmill is made from a half-gallon milk carton with additional pieces cut from lightweight cardboard and sticks. Color may be added by covering portions of the mill with construction paper decorated with gold paper medallions. The neat rectangular garden which is "built" around the borders of a place mat features small permanent clumps of narcissus. A single sprig decorates each napkin.

A night in Venice! Here is a romantic setting that is worthy of delectable fare from Corsica to the northern mountains of Italy. The flower-laden gondola is fashioned with flexible strips of cardboard bent and taped together at prow and stern. The canopy top trimmed with gummed labels is cut from flat cardboard and held up with matchstick dowels. Table setting carries out the theme with a brightly striped Venetian runner, bold-bordered pottery, and handsome crystal tumblers.

"Ah-so-pleased to attend honorable Oriental dinner"! Naturally the only "junk" on the table is the Chinese sailboat floating on a calm sea of rippling bamboo mats. Body of the vessel is constructed with narrow boxes and squares of decorative cardboard. Sail is made from heavy cardboard which has been scored, bent, and attached to 1/8-inch dowel masts. The table is appropriately set with lotus-bordered pottery, lacquered rice bowl, and a reed hair ornament which serves here as an exotic napkin ring.

Summer Corn Relish

Wonderful way to use plentiful fresh corn—

2 cups sugar
2 cups vinegar
1½ teaspoons salt
1½ teaspoons celery seed
½ teaspoon turmeric
2 cups chopped onion
2 cups chopped tomato
2 cups chopped cucumber

2 cups corn, cut from cob
2 cups chopped cabbage

In large Dutch oven, combine sugar, vinegar, salt, celery seed, and turmeric. Heat to boiling; add the vegetables. Cook, uncovered, 25 minutes, stirring occasionally. Pack in hot, scalded jars and seal. Makes 3 pints.

Guacamole

This zesty avocado puree is nearly a must in a Mexican menu—

2 ripe, medium avocados

2 teaspoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon onion juice
1 clove garlic, crushed
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon chopped canned green chiles

Cut avocados in half and remove seeds; peel. Sieve avocado or blend smooth in electric blender. Add remaining ingredients, blending well. Cool and chill. Makes about 2 cups. Serve as appetizer or meat accompaniment, or salad. To serve as a salad, spoon on lettuce. Top with chopped tomatoes, crisp croutons, Parmesan cheese. Makes about 1½ cups Guacamole.

Salad Con Carne

The hot beef, or "carne," is a pleasant contrast to the cool, crisp greens—

1 pound ground beef
¼ cup chopped onion
1 tablespoon beef-flavor gravy base
6 or 8 drops bottled hot pepper sauce

¾ cup water
1 teaspoon cornstarch
1 tablespoon cold water

1 medium head lettuce, torn in bite-size pieces (about 4 cups)

1 large tomato, cut in wedges

½ small onion, thinly sliced and separated into rings
¼ cup green pepper, cut in strips.

½ cup sliced ripe olives
4 ounces (1 cup) shredded sharp natural cheddar cheese

1 6-ounce package corn chips coarsely crushed

In skillet, brown ground beef; add chopped onion, gravy base and hot pepper sauce. Stir in the ¾ cup water. Simmer, covered, 10 minutes, stirring frequently. Combine cornstarch and the 1 tablespoon cold water; stir into meat mixture. Cook and stir till mixture thickens and boils. In salad bowl, combine lettuce, tomato, sliced onion, green pepper, olives, cheese; toss well. Spoon meat; top with corn chips. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Coffee Chiffon Pie or Tarts

For a mocha variation, try it in a chocolate wafer crumb crust—

½ cup sugar
1 envelope (1 tablespoon) unflavored gelatin

1 tablespoon instant coffee
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
3 slightly beaten egg yolks
1 14½-ounce can (1½ cups) evaporated milk
½ teaspoon vanilla

3 egg whites
⅓ cup sugar
1 9-inch baked pastry shell or 4 to 6 baked tart shells
½ cup whipping cream, whipped

In saucepan, thoroughly combine the first ⅓ cup sugar, gelatin, coffee powder, nutmeg, and a dash salt. Combine egg yolks and evaporated milk; stir into gelatin mixture. Cook and stir till gelatin dissolves and mixture thickens slightly. Stir in vanilla. Chill till partially set, stirring frequently. Beat egg whites to stiff peaks; gradually add second ⅓ cup sugar, beating to stiff peaks. Fold in gelatin mixture. Pile in pastry shell or tart shells. Chill till firm. Top with whipped cream and chocolate curls.

Quaker's new Diet Frosted has less calories per bowl than any other kind of cereal—less than half a grapefruit, even less than a slice of dry toast.

Because it is puffed, a full cup of sweetened Diet Frosted Rice Puffs has only 56 calories; Diet Frosted Wheat Puffs has only 51.

Diet Frosted is pre-sweetened but not with sugar leaves. Speed up rooting by dipping cut ends in a rooting hormone. For rooting medium use moist vermiculite or blend of equal parts of sand and moist peat moss.

Insert cuttings two or three inches deep in rooting medium. To reduce watering needs and to keep tops of cuttings in a moist atmosphere, enclose the pots in plastic bags.

Commercial growers are making literally millions of cuttings this month—everything from abutilon or flowering maple to tecoma vines. And, in between, the list ranges all the way from azaleas to Irish yews. Camellias and gardenias respond readily to propagation in July.

Sun-tolerant camellias. Can camellias stand more sun than is commonly believed? Certainly those wonderful old treelike specimens in the sun-drenched city of Sacramento seem to have the ability to stand quite a bit of heat and sun. There are occasional reports from the southern California area—Bakersfield and Pasadena—which indicate that camellias are sturdier than most people realize.

But scientific checking discloses that it's not the heat and light which are the main factors. The real answers lie in soil moisture and humidity. In the climatic zones where humidity is more nearly normal, camellias can get along in the full sun, regardless of the temperature. The foliage tends to be leathery and tough, but the resultant spring blooms almost always open too quickly, shatter early, and burn rapidly.

The right place for camellias is still in filtered shade. The exception is the variety named Flirtation, a delightful pink flowered type specially bred to take sunny conditions. The ingredient that made it possible was an infusion of blood from a species named Camellia salweenensis which possesses vigorous foliage but mediocre blooms.

Soil layering. One of the easiest methods of getting new starts from your favorite shrubs, including all kinds of rhododendrons, pyracantha, aucuba, JULY GARDENING WHERE YOU LIVE!

Norvell Gillespie, Better Homes and Gardens Western Field Editor

Herb harvesttime. You know it's harvesttime when flower clusters appear on thyme, sage, and other popular herbs such as sweet marjoram, oregano, basil.

Bind them in small bundles and dry them in a warm, dark, well-ventilated place. When they're thoroughly dry, strip the leaves from the stems and store them in airtight glass jars until needed. The Lillian Henningsen Herb Garden in Oakland's Lakeside Park is a wonderful place to study herb lore.

Monthly meetings are held by the Herb Society members all year long.

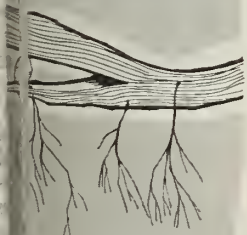

Propagation is fascinating. If you've ever started the commonest of geraniums from cuttings, or the ubiquitous coleus, you have some idea of the fun that comes from starting brand-new plants.

The propagation of woody plants in the summertime is more complicated than sticking a geranium in the ground, but this is a good time to experiment with various plants.

slender, leggy plants into bushy, compact forms.

Now, during the summer months, all the evergreen varieties of azaleas are sending out new shoots.

But in any event, branching can be thickened by pinching back the terminal tip after new growth has pushed out a few inches. What happens is that lateral buds develop and nice, green growth results. This is a good way to avoid that appearance of woodiness which af-soil moisture.

How to make this year's vacation the best you ever had (without straining your budget)

Fodor-Shell Travel Guides U.S.A. give you all the facts you need to plan a perfect trip. Where to go, where to eat and sleep, what to see, what it will cost. Eight regional volumes, $1.95 each. Mail coupon.

Did you ever pack up the family, drive for miles, and then find the place a fizzle? Or toss and turn in a sagging motel bed? Or come home with your wallet empty?

Fodor-Shell guides end these problems by giving you complete information. You get lists of recommended hotels, motels, restaurants, of course. But you also learn when to go, what to take, how to get there, where history was made, where to find your favorite sports—and much more.

Out-of-the-way places, too

Fodor-Shell guides go far beyond telling you about the obvious tourist attractions. They also cover campsites, farm and ranch vacations, and little-known but fascinating places and events. The Washington, D.C., suburb of Georgetown, for example. Most tourists never see it, but this quaint, "old world" village is the home of many famous people. Or take the small town of Angel's Camp, California. A "Jumping Frog Jubilee" is held there every year to commemorate a famous story by Mark Twain. It's all there in Fodor-Shell guides.

How you can save money

your budget. Hotels, motels, and restaurants are listed in five price groupings, Super deluxe to Inexpensive. Here's a typical motel listing:

Inexpensive

(Name of Motel). Full package plan for whole family—music, surf fishing and playgrounds; lounges and shuffleboard. Babysitting. Special weekly rates. (Address and Phone Number).

Inexpensive means about $7.50 single, $11 double. You can choose what you like within your budget and phone ahead for reservations. No more "no vacancy" signs or unexpected expenses.

The award-winning travel guide

In 1966 Fodor-Shell guides became the only travel guides ever to win the "Special Award of Merit" from the National Association of Travel Organizations. All eight volumes were edited by famous travel editor, Eugene Fodor. They're fun to read, a pleasure to go by.

| ¾ cup milk, scalded | 3¼ to 3½ cups sifted all-purpose flour |
| ½ cup sugar | 2 eggs |
| ½ cup shortening | Prune or cheese filling* |
| 1 teaspoon salt | |

Soften yeast in warm water. In large mixing bowl, combine hot milk, sugar, shortening, salt, lemon peel, and nutmeg. Cool to lukewarm; stir in 1 cup of the flour. Beat vigorously for 2 minutes. Add softened yeast and eggs; beat well. Add enough of the remaining flour to make moderately soft dough. Turn out onto floured surface; knead 5 to 8 minutes or until smooth and elastic, kneading in ½ to 1 cup more flour. Place in lightly greased bowl, turning to grease surface. Cover; let rise in warm place till double, about 2 hours. Punch down; divide dough in half. Cover and let rest 10 minutes. Shape each half into 12 balls. Place, 3 inches apart, on greased baking sheets. Flatten each ball to 3-inch diameter. Cover and let rise till double, about 1 hour. Carefully make a depression in center of each roll; fill with prune or cottage cheese filling. Bake in moderate oven (375°) for 10 to 12 minutes. Dust lightly with confectioners' sugar. Makes 2 dozen.

Prune Filling: Measure 1½ cups prunes into saucepan. Add water to cover, about 1 inch above prunes. Cover pan; bring to boiling; simmer 25 to 30 minutes. Drain prunes; pit and chop. Stir in ¼ cup sugar and ½ teaspoon cinnamon.

Cottage Cheese Filling: Sieve ¾ cup well-drained cottage cheese. Combine with ¼ cup sugar, 1 egg yolk, ¼ teaspoon vanilla, and ¼ cup raisins; mix well.

How to make this year's vacation the best you ever had

(without straining your budget)

Fodor-Shell Travel Guides U.S.A. give you all the facts you need to plan a perfect trip. Where to go, where to eat and sleep, what to see, what it will cost. Eight regional volumes, $1.95 each. Mail coupon.

Did you ever pack up the family, drive for miles, and then find the place a fizzle? Or toss and turn in a sagging motel bed? Or come home with your wallet empty?

Fodor-Shell guides end these problems by giving you complete information. You get lists of recommended hotels, motels, restaurants, of course. But you also learn when to go, what to take, how to get there, where history was made, where to find your favorite sports—and much more.

Out-of-the-way places, too

Fodor-Shell guides go far beyond telling you about the obvious tourist attractions. They also cover campsites, farm and ranch vacations, and little-known but fascinating places and events. The Washington, D.C., suburb of Georgetown, for example. Most tourists never see it, but this quaint, "old world" village is the home of many famous people. Or take the small town of Angel's Camp, California. A "Jumping Frog Jubilee" is held there every year to commemorate a famous story by Mark Twain. It's all there in Fodor-Shell guides.

Fodor-Shell guides make it easy to plan ahead and spend within your budget. Hotels, motels, and restaurants are listed in five price groupings, Super deluxe to Inexpensive. Here's a typical motel listing:

Inexpensive

(Name of Motel). Full package plan for whole family—music, surf fishing and playgrounds; lounges and shuffleboard. Babysitting. Special weekly rates. (Address and Phone Number).

Inexpensive means about $7.50 single, $11 double. You can choose what you like within your budget and phone ahead for reservations. No more "no vacancy" signs or unexpected expenses.

The award-winning travel guide

In 1966 Fodor-Shell guides became the only travel guides ever to win the "Special Award of Merit" from the National Association of Travel Organizations. All eight volumes were edited by famous travel editor, Eugene Fodor. They're fun to read, a pleasure to go by.

Snow-capped Stack-ups

Sour cream does double duty here—in the pancakes and atop—

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1 package sour cream | $\frac{1}{2}$ cup pancake mix |
| sauce mix | 1 slightly beaten egg |
| 1 cup milk | 1 package sour cream sauce |
| $\frac{1}{2}$ 12-ounce can luncheon | mix |
| meat, diced (1 cup) | Snipped parsley |

Prepare first package sour cream sauce mix according to package directions, using the 1 cup milk. Combine $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of the sauce with diced luncheon meat; set aside. For pancake batter, combine pancake mix, egg, and remaining $\frac{3}{4}$ cup sour cream sauce. Bake pancakes on medium-hot griddle, using about 2 tablespoons batter for each, making 12 pancakes in all. Place 6 of the pancakes on serving platter or in shallow baking dish. Top each with 2 tablespoons meat mixture; place second pancake atop filling. Keep warm in slow oven (250°) till serving time.

For Sour Cream Sauce: prepare second package sour cream sauce mix according to package directions. Just before serving, spoon sauce over each stack-up. Top with snipped parsley. Makes 6 servings.

The first soft margarine

Eggs Au Gratin

Cheese-sauced eggs baked in crisp cereal nests—

2 tablespoons butter or margarine $\frac{1}{4}$ cup milk
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup sliced ripe olives
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups crisp rice cereal
1 can condensed cheese soup 6 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
In skillet, melt butter or margarine. Add cereal and mix gently. Spoon half the cereal mixture into bottoms of four 10-ounce casseroles. In saucepan, combine soup, milk, and olives; heat through. Fold in all but 8 egg slices. Spoon egg mixture into the 4 casseroles; top each with 2 egg slices and breathe with remaining cereal. Bake in hot oven (400°) about 15 minutes or till hot and bubbling. Makes 4 servings.

Devil Decker Pie

Creamy cousin of the popular Quiche—

stick pie crust mix 1 can condensed cream of mushroom soup 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ -ounce can deviled ham 4 slightly beaten eggs tablespoon fine dry bread crumbs 2 tablespoons chopped chives cup dairy sour cream Dash pepper
Prepare pie crust according to package directions. Line a 9-inch pie plate with pastry; flute edges. Combine deviled ham and crumbs; carefully spread over bottom and sides of pastry. Combine sour cream and soup; blend in eggs, chives, and pepper. Pour into pie shell. Bake in hot oven (400°) about 30 minutes or till knife inserted halfway between center and edge comes out clean. Garnish with additional chives, if desired. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

FACTS ABOUT FABRIC GRAIN

Whenever you work with woven fabrics, it's important to know the grain line since it affects the way your garment or draperies will hang. There are two obvious grains—lengthwise and crosswise.

When you purchase fabric, carefully inspect the crosswise grain. Ideally it should be at a right angle to the lengthwise grain or selvages. Examine the edge closely because sometimes it is not easy to see the position of the crosswise grain unless the fabric has been cut on a drawn thread or torn.

If the crosswise grain is not straight, you'll want to know before you buy whether the fabric can be straightened by pulling it diagonally and then pressing.

Some of the new finishes that impart crease resistance to fabrics prevent them from being straightened once they have been processed off-grain. If a fabric cannot be straightened, you'd better reject it. It will never hang in even folds nor will the finished product have a carefully-made look.

Cutting on crosswise grain

Be careful of printed fabrics that have a prominent crosswise line or motif, particularly if the design is a print, plaid, check, or stripe. Such designs should be woven rather than printed.

When you're ready to cut

To straighten fabric, pull diagonally from low corner

SEGO GIRL

There's a reason why she's a SEGO girl. SEGO works.

It helps make you slender. That's the important thing about SEGO Diet Food.

All the rest is delicious fringe benefit. How good it tastes, for instance. (We're always tempting you with delicious new flavors so you won't get bored.) How good it is for you; how good you feel the whole time you're slimming with SEGO... because each 225-calorie SEGO meal has extra big servings to keep you satisfied. And protein...

lots of protein, to help keep you going 'til the next meal.

SEGO is for finding the joy of a slender figure.

And for being more beautiful.

And that's really the important thing.

Have you tasted the four new very deep, very dark, very rich Sego "very" flavors? Mmmmm.

fabric, before you do anything else, straighten both ends by drawing a crosswise thread then cut along its path. Proceed by testing the crosswise end of the fabric for squareness against the corner of a rectangular or square table. The selvage should follow one side of table, and the crosswise edge should follow end of the table.

Few fabrics should be torn. This distorts the crosswise edge and pulls it off grain. Curtains and drapery fabrics must never be torn. To help straighten fabric, pull it diagonally and press with steam. If a fabric is finished so it cannot be pulled and pressed straight, you have no choice. You must square off at the end—disregarding the crosswise grain. Pin selvage edges together so the grain is as even as possible.

If you decide to shrink fabric to straighten it, pull threads and even the crosswise grain at both ends. Baste crosswise edges together and selvage edges together. Moisten in water; stretch grain along printed squares of a cutting board, on a rectangular table or rug, until dry.

Crosswise seams and hem will not be as pretty as the cut on grain, nor will fabric hang evenly in a curtain or drape. The more you work with fabric, the more grain-conscious you become—you'll even begin to recognize the direction of grain automatically.

BEAUTIFUL COVER-UPS

Low maintenance is getting high priority in today's garden—and as a result, ground covers are playing an ever-growing part. Both large and small areas are being covered by the flattering green mantles of ground-hugging plants. There are ground covers for sunny spots (fleece-flower, juniper), for shady areas (bishop's weed, Virginia creeper), dry soil (blue fescue, portulaca). Some are evergreen for year-round effectiveness; others come up from roots or self-sown seed each spring.

Photograph: Bill Hedrich, Hedrich-Blessing Data: Jessie Walker

Above. Pachysandra encircles the trunk of this large tree for more reasons than just to improve its looks. The unusual shape of the tree trunk base required hand trimming of grass. Large roots on the surface of the ground were forever being damaged by mower, and grass was always sparse close to trunk. A ground cover of pachysandra solved all these problems with a bonus of white flowers in late spring and green foliage year-round. It grows well in shaded areas over most of the country.

Below. Here, a meandering strip of Confederate jasmine pleasantly leads the eye to the front entrance. It offers an interesting texture contrast to the grass—and also discourages pedestrian traffic across the lawn. This jasmine is a favorite with southern gardeners. Vinca minor gives much the same effect for northern areas. The vinca has small, round, white flowers; the jasmine showier, white, star-shaped blooms.

HOW MANY MUSTARDS DO YOU KNOW?

Every good cook knows the value of mustard for adding that extra zing! But not every aware of the myriad kinds of mustard available, all falling into three basic classifications: mustard seed, powdered dry mustard, and prepared mustard. Mustard seed, though commonly used in pickling, makes a wonderful addition to a barbecue sauce or crisp salad. Powdered dry mustard (sometimes called mustard flour) is made by grinding mustard seed. It's most often used as a cooking spice, but can be reconstituted with water, vinegar, white wine to make an extremely hot mustard for table use.

Vinegar, spices, and turmeric are added to powdered mustard to make prepared mustard, the most common being salad-style (the hot dog type). Also popular are golden-broccoli spicy salad style, Dijon-style (a subtly seasoned mustard) and horseradish mustards. In your adventure into the world of specialty mustards, you'll find an almost endless selection of both American and imported varieties (American mustards are usually somewhat milder).

Photographs: Scott

Mustard 'n Ham Dip

Robust in flavor—it's a wonderful dip for crisp fresh relishes as well as an assortment of crackers and chips—

Combine one 4-ounce package whipped cream cheese, one 2½-ounce can deviled ham, 1½ teaspoons Dijon-style mustard, 1 tablespoon chopped chives, and 2 teaspoons milk. Chill well; serve with relishes and chips.

Zippy Mustard Slaw

Choose this snappy salad to accent grilled hot dogs in toasted buns—a quick backyard feast!—

Combine 4 cups shredded cabbage, ½ cup diced cucumber, ½ cup diced celery, and ¼ cup chopped green pepper; chill well. Thoroughly blend ½ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing with 2 tablespoons vinegar, 2 teaspoons prepared mustard, ¼ teaspoon salt, and ¼ teaspoon paprika. Pour dressing over chilled vegetables; toss together lightly. Makes about 6 servings.

Mustard Garlic Dressing

The garlic is subtle—mustard adds the pizazz!

In bottle, combine ¾ cup salad oil, ¼ cup vinegar, 1 teaspoon sugar, ¾ teaspoon Dijon-style mustard, dash freshly ground black pepper, and 1 small clove garlic minced. Cover and chill for several hours. Shake well before serving over tossed salad or crisp shredded cabbage. Makes 1 cup.

Hot Mustard Sauce

Great on cold meats and in sandwiches!

Melt 3 tablespoons butter or margarine in 1 teaspoon flour. Add ¼ cup vinegar, ¼ cup beef broth, 3 tablespoons brown sugar, and ¼ cup prepared horseradish mustard. Cook slowly, stirring constantly, until thickened. Gradually add a little hot mixture of slightly beaten egg yolk; return to boiling point, stirring constantly; serve hot with corned beef or ham. Makes 1 cup of sauce.

Don't throw the baby out with the bathwater.

It's a funny thing about the American economy. Ask any economists what makes it tick and you've started a debate.

At the same time, the simple, ingenuous truth of the matter is this: nobody really knows or agrees on the influences that combine to give it muscle, or where all its weaknesses may lie.

You'll get agreement on one thing: it seems to work. It has produced the broadest and most abundant prosperity in all the histories of man . . . the highest standard of living for the greatest number of people.

One part of this restless, growing, vital economy is always has been: free competition. That's what distinguished it from the managed economies of the world . . . economies managed either by government or by cartel.

Free competition has been the sharp spur that has produced the incredible variety of products and services we have today. It has produced the endless innovations that have made life easier to live. More enjoyable. More rewarding.

It has encouraged manufacturers to build more things . . . and to build them better . . . and at lower prices. They have to build them better . . . and the prices have to be right . . . or the consumer stops buying. Because, the other side of free competition is your free choice in the marketplace.

This is the astonishing power of the American consumer. He can make or break the largest businesses with a nod or a shake of the head. He has the choice. He has the ballot of the dollar.

That's why it is disturbing to find people of influence in America today who would like to make both free competition and free choice a little less free.

They may concede that the system has produced some great results but they'd like to "fix it a little."

There are too many kinds of olives, they say. Let's standardize.

Company "A" spends more on advertising than Company "B", and that's unfair competition, they plead. Let's regulate.

Yet, our system was built on exactly the opposite kind of thinking.

Regulation doesn't stimulate competition. It tends to make all products the same.

How much can you interfere with the competitive economy, which has brought us so many benefits, without damaging it?

The truth is, nobody knows.

The "Little" fixes may someday add up to quite a lot.

Of course, any economy needs some regulation—but let's be sure that we don't throw out the baby with the bath water.

NEW ROOM AT THE TOP

The owners of this contemporary house needed more living space, but there was no room on their lot for an addition at the front or either side. Rather than steal space from the backyard, they went up—with a new second story that has a master bedroom, bath, loads of storage and a compact home office.

Top: Only a mirror, waist-high wall, and marble sink top separate the compartmented bath and master bedroom; opposite the sink is a built-in vanity. Storage underneath both units holds toiletries, towels, and cleaning supplies.

The entire addition is paneled, with beams and a plank ceiling overhead. Most of the furniture is built-in.

Center: Sliding glass doors opposite the bed provide it with a bird's eye view of the treetops and access to a narrow, wraparound deck outside.

For the deck, planks were nailed together and laid on top of the original tar and gravel roof. Four-by-four-inch posts fastened to the eaves overhead support the pipe railings.

Plan: The bath and a big dressing room divide the new second floor, leaving just enough space at one end for a comfortable den-office. Compact units in a utility closet beside the den supply heat and hot water for the addition.

To accommodate the new stairway, a closet in the downstairs hall was relocated, and sliding glass doors to the patio were added.

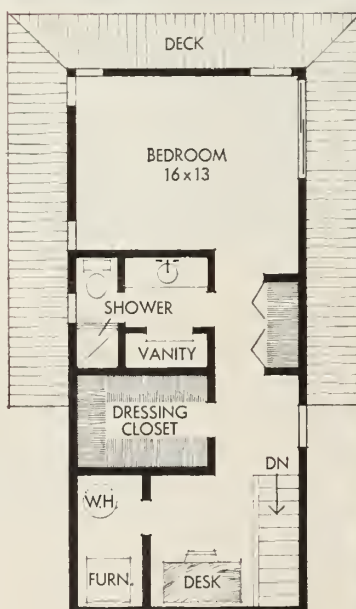

The addition measures 17x39 feet; it has 608 square feet of floor space.

Far right: The exterior's redwood clapboard siding matches the house's original trim, and blends in with the red brick on the first floor.

Existing roofing and one inch of insulation were removed before the new story was constructed.

Philco refrigerators like the 21-cubic-foot

make this a standout window treatment. Long cafes are suspended from a cafe rod by two-inch loops made of cotton braid. A companion braid in a wider width was glued to the window frame to create a smart looking lambrequin.

For a similar effect, choose cafe curtains in a patterned fabric and apply a matching wallpaper border onto the window frame.

Cafes are compatible with almost any furnishings style.
For an informal effect, choose gingham, sailcloth, or denim.
Go formal with antique satin, silk sheer, or a textured synthetic. And if it's a frothy bouffant look you want, try organdy, dotted swiss, or a filmy synthetic.

When cafe curtains are hung in tiers, the lower one can be closed for privacy—the upper pushed back to let in light and air. This arrangement can mask heating or cooling units.

World's Most Amazing Adjustable Dress Form GUARANTEES CUSTOM-FITTING CLOTHES ... OR NO COST!

A Newly Patented Single Form That Adjusts Quickly and Easily to Regular Sizes and Many Figure
Variations from 8 to 20 Inclusive
(Special Model for Sizes 20 1/2-50).
New... Easy-to-Use... Low Cost!

So Easy To Use Even a Beginner Can Sew Custom-Fitting Clothes Quickly and Easily. Distinguished Italian-American Designer Creates Brand New PER-FECT FIT ADJUST-O-MATIC Dress
Form. So Strong It Won't Crack, Chip or Break — Stores Away Easily!

None of that dreaded home-made look. Why pay $30 or more for a dress form? You'll create professional styles and precision fit with the aid of ADJUST-O-MATIC for a fraction of the cost — Even if you never made clothes before.

If you are one of the many women who "struggle along" on guesswork without a dress form—if you've hesitated to invest in a dress form that is useless once you gain or lose weight—if you feel that an adjustable form has too many complications and not enough accuracy — if you've never sewed your own clothes before—here's exciting news for you!

Distinguished Designer Develops Most Flexible Dress Form Ever

After years of painstaking research, Luigi Cella, Distinguished Italian-American designer for 35 years, has finally developed PRECISION FIT ADJUST-O-MATIC, the one dress form so handy and simple to use... so easy to assemble with the clear step-by-step instructions included... so flexible and adaptable that you can virtually reconstruct your own figure and that of other women in your family. The Magic Secret, found only in ADJUST-O-MATIC, is a unique precision-accurate method of "dialing" your dimensions. You gently apply pressure with your fingers until your printed number shows through the magic windows in every measurement area—and ADJUST-O-MATIC virtually reconstructs your figure.

Takes The Guess- work Out of Sewing

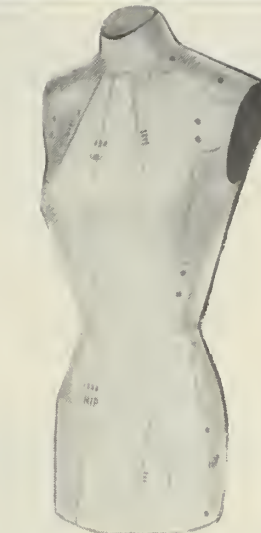

With your ADJUST-
O-MATIC dress form you see in advance just how attractive and becoming your dress, skirt, coat, or blouse will look. Now you can fit, pin, hem, baste, alter perfectly the very first time.

The simplicity of doing all this is almost unbelievable. ADJUST-O-MATIC adjusts quickly and easily to regular sizes and many
model for sizes 20 1/2-50). You can make literally dozens of different combinations
... compensate for slight body defects... then readjust to a completely different size and shape for other women in your family.

Now whether you make your clothes or buy them, you can be fashionable, stylish, comfortable and custom-fitted at all times. With ADJUST-O-MATIC you remodel last year's clothes into 1967 fashions quickly, easily, and expertly... make alterations in a jiffy... design your own styles or use any standard pattern.

Now save needless hours fitting your clothes. Never again need you rip out seams because your skirt didn't hang properly the first time.

Never again need you struggle, strain, twist, turn, trying to get a perfect fit... or wear out-of-style clothes... or discard expensive alterable suits and dresses because you've gained or lost a few pounds.

IMAGINE!
This rugged, adjustable steel stand that folds away in seconds for a collapsible form. Stand recommended for best results with dresses, coats, other full figure clothes.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR

"Mother! For heaven's sake!"

Although children once "hid behind their mother's skirt," Grandma Hillis says this year's fashions are much too brief to support any such accusation.

Bill Norman thinks his lawn is suffering from a mysterious disease. His wife Isabel, however, diagnoses the trouble as an overdose of rain coupled with inadequate applications of lawn mower.

Grumpy Ned Carter says that if outdoor living gains any more popularity, he will tell the city fathers to require smog-control devices on barbecue pits.

I doubt leisure time will ever really become a problem. Judging by my own experience, we'll have to work that much harder to pay for all the expensive hobbies we take up to occupy the time.

Now that all 1968 cars sold in the United States are supposed to carry anti-pollution devices, Elaine Cowan wants similar controls applied to cigars.

According to the Agriculture Department, it now costs from $13,000 to $27,000 to rear a farm youth. My "farming uncle" Dodd Buckner suggests that the two extremes probably depend on whether the youngster owns a car.

Columbus came to America in 1492, and Burt Jr.—who has been bitten by the golf bug—claims "that's pretty good when you consider the distance."

He's not opposed to community organizations, but Editor Joe Lyons wishes a few of the newer ones would zero in on some project other than writing daily news releases.

Our Thursday luncheon group agrees that what the nation needs is more and better local government. However, we couldn't provide a solution to the problem of getting more than a dozen people to attend a City Council meeting.

The Hillis water bill took quite a leap last month. Christine says more of Rosemary's boyfriends are washing their cars on our driveway this summer.

Lee Bayless returned from a fishing trip and reported that there are 1,000 ways to catch whoppers—and not one of them works.

Judy, age 10 and slightly finicky, returned from a session at camp with the information that the meals "were pretty good, except for a salad you can't even stand to look at."

A recent late-afternoon thunderstorm reminded me that all the toys in the world will never replace a large puddle—a source of excitement to the children on our block.

"Men do have more temptations than women," the Rev. George Hall observed last Sunday, "because men usually know where to find them, and have a car to get there."

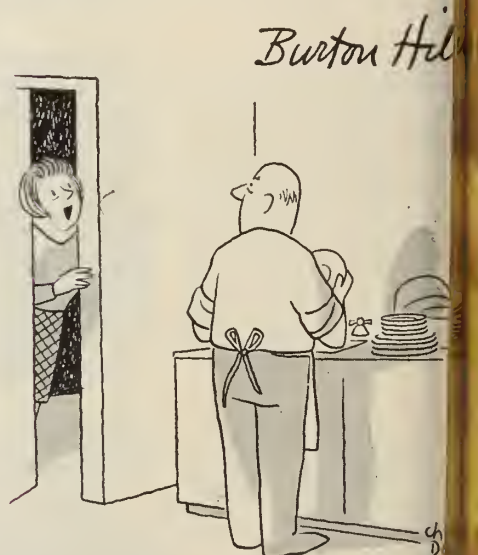

The trouble with being prompt at meetings is that there is no one around to appreciate it.

Christine invited me to accompany her to the department store's recent "evening school," so I tagged along, partly out of curiosity over what the future might bring to our dinner table.

The session was enlightening. "The wealthy once had a household staff to do the chores," said the home economist in charge, "but today's appliances do the work of many servants. They wash and dry the clothes, preserve the food, prepare the meals, dispose of scraps, and even do the dishes."

All that's required, I thought to myself, is some advanced knowledge of dials, timers, and other assorted gadgetry. But the home economist had an answer for that, too. She said modern appliances "operate with such ease and simplicity that even husbands enjoy working in the kitchen."

At least that's what the home economist claimed. Christine thinks I've been a little slow to catch on.

"After you finish the dishes, come and look at this romantic moon."

Colgate is New! Improved! Fortified!

There's more taste excitement than ever.

We really done it! We've made a great anti-cavity toothpaste even better. New Colgate is improved—that famous Colgate taste is fresher than ever. Fortified! Now there's more anti-cavity research than ever. A new dental study... a test at a major university... and clinical research published in an official dental journal all confirm: Colgate unsurpassed in reducing new cavities, when compared to the best-known fluoride. Colgate is the anti-cavity toothpaste your family needs. (But don't be surprised if the kids already know about it. Colgate is sponsoring a nationwide school dental-health program to teach your children all about correct brushing, visits to the dentist, the works.)

Anti-cavity Colgate.

Yes, the Flavor's Fresher

FAMILY MONEY MANAGEMENT[®]

Peter Lindberg, Editor

How much should you save to send your child to college?

Right now, it will cost you at least $1,500 a year or so to send your youngster to a public college. For a private college education, you'll pay as much as $3,500 a year, and there's every indication that both these averages will run from $2,000 to over $5,000 by 1975. Of course, scholarships and low-cost loans may help, but you'll still need a healthy sum to see your children through school.

The best solution? Start putting money away systematically into a fund. A $10,000 reserve goes a long way toward covering college costs, and there are several ways to accumulate this sum in ten or fifteen years.

- One possibility is through a savings account. Figuring today's typical interest rates of four percent compounded quarterly, it would take $67.95 a month to yield $10,000 in ten years—and $40.74 to do the same in 15 years.

- Government savings bonds—especially E bonds—also assure you a guaranteed return on your investments. The E bonds, which cost $18.75 each, now mature to their $25 value in seven years; that's 4.15 percent interest, compounded twice a year. If you bought four bonds a month ($75), you'd have $10,995 at the end of ten years. (And if you combine E bonds with the new "Freedom Shares," they can yield 4.68 percent on your money.)

- Another basic college-fund builder is insurance—such as a $10,000 straight life policy. The money will be there even if you aren't, and while you're protected, you're also building up a cash value for college expenses.

A $10,000 straight life policy taken out at age 25 costs you about $12 a month ($136 a year) and has a cash value of about $1,700 in 15 years. At age 35, you can buy this policy for $17 a month, or $190 a year, and the cash value will be about $1,400 in ten years, or $2,300 in 15 years.

If you want insurance protection and the whole $10,000 ten or 15 years from now, consider an endowment policy—a stepped-up savings plan protected by insurance.

As you'd expect, the monthly costs are much higher than straight life policies since the cash value accumulates so rapidly. At 25, an endowment plan that insures you for $10,000 and builds up that much cash in 15 years will cost $53 a month ($615 a year). In contrast, the same money would get you $45,000 straight life protection on a policy yielding about $7,650 in cash value in 15 years.

A $10,000, ten-year endowment plan would cost a 35-year-old man $86 a month, or $982 a year; at that price he could get $51,000 straight life protection with about $7,200 in cash value after ten years.

- In the investment field, mutual funds provide you with a regular way to save. Of course, there's no guarantee these funds will grow at a precise rate, but their past performance has been very good. And although the kinds of funds and their exact yields vary, the average common stock mutual fund can bring you surprising results: on an initial investment of $250, plus $50 a month (with all dividends and capital gains going toward additional shares for ten years), you could build up $10,300—$4,100 more than the $6,200 you put in.

- Or, there's the New York Stock Exchange's Monthly Investment Plan. It offers another route to college financing—this time with common stock that you choose yourself.

Through a broker, you arrange to invest the same amount of money in a stock at regular intervals. Your plan can be set up for as little as $50 every three months, and the amount of money invested for you remains the same, no matter what the stock sells for. When the price drops, your money buys more shares (or portions of shares); when it rises, you get fewer shares, but those you already own have gone up in value. Over the long haul, this system of "dollar-cost averaging" can yield good profits.

As with mutual funds, there is no guarantee of profit, but during the past few years the Monthly Investment Plan generally has done well. One typical stock (General Electric) brought almost $10,000 for a ten-year investment of $50 a month under the Monthly Investment Plan. Another stock (General Motors) yielded about $14,000 for the same monthly investment, and one of the more spectacular securities (IBM) built up to approximately $25,000.

How much should a working wife spend on herself?

She shouldn't spend much—for the simple reason that after additional taxes and job-connected expenses, there's surprisingly little left over. This doesn't mean a working wife should deny herself occasional small pleasures that she couldn't otherwise afford. But if you're thinking of taking a job mostly for the sake of extra spending money, you're certainly on the wrong track—as a wife and mother, and as a money manager.

First of all, there are really only two good reasons to work once you have children. One is to supplement family income to achieve important family goals: building up savings for emergencies and retirement; paying for your children's education; buying additional life insurance for increased family security; or perhaps paying for some special family project, such as a once-in-a-lifetime vacation.

The other good reason for working (after the children are old enough to get along well at home most of the day without you) is just plain stimulation. With this stimulation comes the added reward of using your talents and training.

Somebody had to break the rules.

No one knew what to think! Though dressed like a man, there was no mistaking that she was all female. That woman in the first pants suit broke the rules all right. And so did Dash—to create a breakthrough detergent for automatic washers.

To change things for the cleaner, Dash broke the rules:

- 1 Where conventional detergents recommend you start with 1½ cups per washload, it's only ¾ of a cup with Dash. Concentrated fury.

- 2 Typical detergents whip up lots of suds. But excess suds can dull your wash. So Dash cut down on suds to give your clothes a clear, clean rinse.

- 3 Traditional detergents are for use in sinks, tubs, pails, and everywhere else under the sun. But Dash is only for automatics. After all, that's where you wash your clothes. And so that's where Dash concentrates its talents.

No wonder Dash cleans better than any powder made for all automatics.

But in either case, it would make little sense to squander the extra money on soon-forgotten trivia. Keep in mind that the extra disposable money you bring home is extremely expensive in terms of gross family income. You may have to earn as much as three dollars or more to have just one dollar left over.

According to the Institute of Life Insurance, here's what could happen in a typical New York family where the husband's gross income is $10,000 a year, and the wife, mother of three children—takes a job for $90 a week ($4,680 a year):

Withholding taxes, Social Security, and other payroll deductions average $21.11 a week, leaving $68.89 take-home pay. Average weekly job-connected expenses—transportation, lunches, part-time child care, extra wardrobe and personal grooming, additional household expenses—gobble up another $23.50. Surveys also show that the working wife spends 10 to 15 percent more for food, largely because she has less time for comparison shopping. And, she's likely to spend up to twice as much on clothes and grooming as the average housewife.

This leaves a weekly net of $45.39, or $2,360.28 a year. But that's still not all spendable income. At the end of the year, an additional $477.20 would be due in federal and state income taxes—besides what's already been withheld from the husband's and wife's paychecks (assuming the standard 10 percent deduction on a joint return). What's the net additional disposable income for the year? Just $1,883.

If a husband's gross annual income is $7,500 a year, less than $10,000, a mother of two earning $80 a week could have only about $1,700 net to the family funds. To figure out your own situation, use the table below.

EXPLORING TEN OF OUR MOST FASCINATING CITIES AND TOWNS

Looking for something different in vacationing—for a weekend or a longer trip? Then discover the adventures awaiting you in American cities and towns that still retain a special mood and atmosphere all their own. To give you some idea of what's in store, we put together this ten-part travel package. Some of our suggested cities are fairly large, others small—but each has a unique allure for families. Try to visit at least one or two of them during the coming year; you'll be glad you tried this "slow-down-and-relax" vacationing!

NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND

In Newport, you never cease being refreshed by the sea and its traditions.

The town's original livelihood in the 1700s sprang from a four-cornered sea trade with Europe, Africa, and the West Indies. In the late 1800s, wealthy Americans made this remote community their summer home because the ocean breezes were so delightfully cool. Finally, in this century, the U.S. Navy established training schools and a destroyer base at Newport's fine harbor.

Today, visitors to this island-town rediscover all three of its heritages. Pre-Revolutionary frame houses still line the narrow, crooked streets that pitch abruptly down to the wharves. Farther back, magnificent Victorian mansions—some open to the public from May to October—dominate the surf-lashed Atlantic shore. And everywhere you see blue-clad sailors, midshipmen, and naval officers who drew space-age duty in this historic New England port.

A good place to start your Newport tour is at the grand old Viking Hotel (or its new motor inn). Pick up the free leaflet, "Historic Walking Tour of Newport," and let it guide you to sparkling white Trinity Church, the red-brick Old Colony House, and the mysterious Old Stone Mill which may have been built by some unrecorded Viking explorers—or, somewhat less romantically, by Benedict Arnold's uncle.

To size up today's Newport in comfort, try Viking Tours' 22-mile bus expedition (adults $4, children $2). The fee includes admission to either "The Breakers" or "The Elms," the town's best-known mansions. Though once considered "summer cottages" by their owners, these American palaces are as splendid as many of Europe's most famous. You'll be stunned by their restored architecture and furnishings. Typical separate admission charges are $1.75 for adults, 75 cents for children 6-16 years old.

You must, of course, explore the renowned Cliff Walk, which begins at the foot of Ruggles Avenue. On this three-mile footpath, you'll stroll high above the boulder-strewn beach; just behind you range the manicured front lawns of "The Breakers" and the other villas. Be sure to carry a packet of three map-guides (50 cents) published by the Preservation Society of Newport County; they describe the history of notable pre-Revolutionary and Victorian homes in this vicinity.

Where Cliff Walk ends, the popular Ocean Drive begins. For ten additional miles, you can drive along a New England roadside dotted with more recent summer homes. These stand starkly outlined against the sky, commanding splendid views of the sea and its picturesque inlets.

To be sure, Newport is not all history or scenery. The month of July is packed almost solid with festivals like the famous week-long Jazz Festival—plus a week each for opera and folk music celebrations. The Newport Chamber of Commerce will gladly supply dates, ticket prices, and other information—and it's none too early to make next year's reservations.

Newport's restaurants serve some of the best seafood and Yankee cooking in New England. Christie's, The Pier, Canfield House, and the Shamrock Cliff House out along Ocean Drive are all excellent. (Ask for the distinctive Rhode Island johnny-cakes, served hot with butter and maple syrup.) And just around the corner from Canfield House is a magnetic arcade of shops called Newport Casino.

As with so many old New England towns, Newport's charm grew partly from its remoteness. But a new bridge is under construction to the west, and by late 1968, traffic will roll into Newport directly from Connecticut and New York City. Right now the expressway heads up around the state capital in Providence before State Highway 114 drops south to Mt. Hope bridge and Newport.

Until 1968, you can dodge the high-speed pavement by taking the ferry from Jamestown to Newport ($1.25 for car and driver, 15 cents per passenger). Youngsters love the leisurely half-hour trip across a neck of Narragansett Bay, with its pungent salt air breezes, its many dashing naval vessels—and that first unforgettable sea-view of Colonial Newport.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA

In California, where 150 years is often Ancient History, there are few cities that still mirror the Spanish-Colonial culture that once graced this land. The shining exception is sleepy Santa Barbara, nestled between the Santa Ynez mountains and a line of golden beaches just 92 miles north of Los Angeles.

Downtown, history lies all around you—from original adobe dwellings to the county courthouse, a marvel of Spanish-Moorish architecture with sunken gardens and colorful murals. Scattered across the rest of this city of 70,000, you'll see many graceful Moorish arches and red tile roofs. And in August, the town turns out for the Old Spanish Days Fiesta; then you can see elegantly costumed dons and their ladies strolling along the streets.

But there's more than just history here. Because of its mild, sunny climate, Santa Barbara is decked with flowers and greenery most of the year. You'll find beautiful spots like Cabrillo Boulevard, a wide, palm-shaded park that runs for miles beside the beach. On a clear day, you can see the Channel Islands lying 20 miles offshore, and on weekends artists show their works at the foot of nearby State Street.

In the summer, especially, Santa Barbara is tailor-made for family vacations. As a starter, you'll want to visit the Child's Estate, an 81-acre retreat with a zoo, a bird refuge and a sealarium.

Not far from here, explore a roundhouse built in the shape of a Spanish bull ring. And west on Cabrillo, save time for the new Undersea Gardens; its wide underwater windows give you a grandstand view of California's marine life, from sharks to stingrays.

Then stroll up State Street and browse Santa Barbara's elegant shops. If you're hungry, try eating under the skies at El Paseo, an authentic Spanish-California restoration. Next to it, you can see the De la Guerra adobe, once the residence of the richest family in California.

In this part of town, you'll find other historic buildings open to the public. One of the most interesting is the Covarrubias Adobe, where Mexican settlers held their last assembly to defend California against the Americans. At nearby Chapala and Monecito streets stands a historic fig tree, with branches so wide that 10,000 persons could stand under its shelter at one time. High above the city, you will want to wander through the stately Mission Santa Barbara, one of the best preserved missions along the Pacific coast; guided tours start every half hour from 10 to 5.

Along with its fine golf courses, Santa Barbara boasts some special outdoor treats too—deep-sea fishing near the Channel islands, lawn bowling on carpet-like greens—and a polo game every Sunday at 2 p.m. Besides this, the city has outstanding art, historical, and natural history museums, plus theaters and concerts that draw many visitors. Evening is a quiet time in Santa Barbara, though, and the clubs and nightspots are relatively few and far between.

Yet Santa Barbara is a city of exotic restaurants, with the emphasis on Spanish specialties and seafood. For seafood, try the Harbor Restaurant, perched far out on central pier; it's decorated with the bulkheads of an old-time sailing ship, and looks across the water to the palm-fringed beaches. Or you can sit by the open hearth of the Talk of the Town—built in one of the original homes—and sample its flaming desserts. Casa de Seville, one of the several fine Spanish restaurants, features memorable Castilian menus. For a change of pace, drive 11 miles north to The Timbers—built with what was left of an oil derrick shelled by a Japanese sub during World War II.

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO

For a real flop-on-the-beach vacation in the tropics, take a flying trip to Puerto Rico, where gentle trade winds keep you air-conditioned as the sun glistens hot from sky and sand.

And though it's way down in the Caribbean, getting there is not expensive. San Juan, the capital, boasts the lowest cross-the-ocean air fares in the world; a jet round trip from New York—some 1,600 miles—is $104.50 for a ten-day excursion ticket, and from Los Angeles, a 30-day excursion will cost you just $302.60.

Few places offer such a complete change of atmosphere as San Juan. It's an American vacation resort, with all the luxury this implies—but there's an old-world charm that snares you the minute you set foot on this early outpost of the Spanish Main.

Old San Juan, hardly changed since the days when plumed soldiers manned its ramparts, sprawls across gentle slopes. Along its narrow, cobblestoned streets, people live with windows and doors open, Mediterranean-style; laughter echoes from balconies and courtyards late into the balmy nights.

From La Fortaleza, the fortress-palace that still is seat of Puerto Rico's government under our flag, walk the ancient city wall to El Morro, the imposing fort guarding the entrance to the port. Here you can photograph the famous San Juan battlements, rising from winding cliffs above the ocean's thunder.

Be sure to visit the beautiful San Jose Church, dating back to 1532, and Cristo Chapel, with its ornate silver altar standing in an open niche atop the wall. Near this chapel is one of San Juan's best restaurants, the cozy La Danza, which specializes in true Puerto Rican food: squid on rice, or pasteles (green bananas stuffed with meat).

Outside the Old City tower the new luxury resort hotels. Here the mood and the restaurants are more international. One of the best is Salon Real, in the elegant Condado Beach Hotel. Also worth your while are the La Alhambra (in the penthouse of the Sheraton, with a spectacular view, and fashion shows at lunch), La Zaragozana in the Old City, and El Cid, offering entertainment until midnight.

And midnight is when San Juan night life really begins. Most clubs open at 11 p.m. and close at 4 or 5 a.m. You'll enjoy La Goleta, across from the Condado Beach, the Ocho Puertas, and the Spot in the Sun. In addition, many big hotels have their own casinos.

Other resort facilities include fresh-water swimming, skin-diving lessons, deep-sea fishing, and sight-seeing trips. You can pick from several bay cruises, often passing near ships anchored by our big Navy base. El Comandante race track is open three afternoons a week, and there are cockfights—a favorite Latin American sport—Saturdays and Sundays.

San Juan swings winter and summer, for its weather is gorgeous almost all year long. The best choice of accommodations (and the lowest rates) may be had between the tourist seasons—in May and June, and from September to Christmas. Most resort hotels are right in the city area; two other vacation centers, Dorado Beach and Fajardo, are within easy driving distance.

For a memorable day's drive, head east to Luquillo Beach, 27 miles from the city. This is the island's loveliest beach, with white sand, calm waters, and graceful coconut palms. It curves around a wide bay flanked by high, blue mountains that catch the heavy clouds rolling up from the south.

Though Luquillo Beach basks in brilliant sunshine, up in those mountains you'll find the intermittent downpours of the jungle tropics—a steam bath that nourishes fantastic vegetation and waterfalls. At the rain forest of El Yunque, a few miles off Luquillo Highway, walking paths have been cut into the jungle.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS

After 131 years of "Remember the Alamo!" San Antonio has a new cry: "Come to HemisFair!" It's a hearty invitation to the state's first World's Fair, which opens next spring for a six-month run from April 6 through October 6. The fair will celebrate the 250th birthday of this historic, sun-drenched city; there will be pleasures galore for all seven million people expected to attend.

San Antonio is an exuberant, bi-cultural town (nearly half its population is of Mexican descent), and HemisFair will reflect this heritage. Lively mariachi bands and wild flamenco dancers, plus cowboys and Indians and strolling storytellers, will contribute to the gay, fiesta feeling. There'll be 92 acres of amusements, exhibits, and gardens, and even the transportation promises to be fun—rickshaws, a sky ride, a mini-monorail, and an armada of boats on a mile-long waterway. A quiet river now flows through San Antonio; a canal will connect it with the fairgrounds so visitors can beat the traffic by taking river taxis.

Above it all will rise the majestic Tower of the Americas, crowned by a revolving restaurant and two observation levels. When completed, the tower will be 622 feet high—the city's tallest structure.

But you don't need to wait until HemisFair to enjoy San Antonio. Start with the River Walk—or Paseo del Rio; it lies just 15 feet below street level, but puts the city noises far away. Shade trees flutter over cobblestone walks, which follow the banks of a narrow, peaceful canal. At one point, an outdoor theater straddles the canal, with the audience on one shore, the actors on the other.

You'll discover tasteful craft and antique shops, too, and several excellent restaurants (all equipped for terrace dining—and even for dining on boats, if you prefer). After dark, River Walk's night spots open up. You'll enjoy El Poco Loco, with a Mexican flavor, and The Landing, with rousing sing-along sessions, and a superior Dixieland band.

If you extend your stroll to the nearby Mexican-American neighborhood, you can see tortillas being made, shop at the clamorous, open-air Farmers Market—and come home with a colorful piñata souvenir.

The famed Alamo, where Santa Anna's forces were furiously repelled until the death of the last defender, is right downtown. South from the Alamo are four other missions, the farthest just eight miles away; perhaps the most interesting is Mission San Jose, now a national historic site and state park.

Across the street from the HemisFair grounds stands La Villita, San Antonio's oldest settlement; each April, it's the hub of fiesta activity during a week-long Texas Independence celebration. Among other prime San Antonio attractions are the Spanish Governor's Palace, San Fernando Cathedral, and the many Victorian mansions lining King William Street.

From San Antonio you can take some intriguing one-day excursions. On the Pedernales River, about 65 miles straight north from San Antonio, you'll find the President's LBJ Ranch. If you head there on a roundabout northwesterly route, you can sample some rugged Texas hill country on a road connecting Bandera's dude ranches with the big cattle ranches near Kerrville. In the opposite direction, just across a bridge in Corpus Christi, stretches Padre Island National Seashore. Even Mexico is handy—from San Antonio to the border at Laredo, it's barely a three-hour drive.

NEW HOPE, PENNSYLVANIA

New Hope is a crazy quilt of fascinating shops, galleries, and colonial homes—topped off by Pennsylvania's official state theater, the Bucks County Playhouse.

New Hope, which first attracted painters in the early part of this century, has become one of the thriving art centers of the East. Set in the lush hill country along the Delaware River, about 35 miles from Philadelphia and 65 from New York, it's home to many prominent artists, writers, and theater people.

in several galleries and shops. Here, behind names like "The Pampered Porch," "Conglomeration," or the "Gourmet Gazebo," you'll find the whimsical and the rare. The New Hope Craft Shop offers fine imports and creations by local artisans; at the Selective Eye, you can buy choice Scandinavian ware, and at the Tony Sarg Shop, some distinctive women's clothing. George Nakashima, world-famous furniture designer, has an impressive contemporary showroom that's open Saturdays. There are dozens of other colorful stores, so plan on a full day of browsing.

If you're after antiques, start with New Hope's own shops. Then drive west a few miles along Highway 202, an antique-hunter's heaven. Don't miss Peddler's Village, a cluster of red clapboard and stone buildings that originally were part of a chicken hatchery; for lunch, try the Cock 'n Bull restaurant there.

Youngsters will be as fascinated as you are with New Hope's odds and ends, but there are some special treats for them. On old Delaware Canal, which runs right through town, you can ride a mule-drawn barge. Pontoon boats also cruise the Delaware, and on weekends, an old steam engine chugs into the countryside from a storybook station. Save time, too, for a visit to the reconstructed Parry Barn (owned by the New Hope Historical Society), the nearby bird-banding station, and Doylestown's Mercer Museum, with its vast, fascinating collection of early craft and trade tools.

To see some of the finest summer theater in the country, spend an evening at Bucks County Playhouse, once a colonial-era grist mill. It features Broadway stars in shows that run from May through September; write well in advance for tickets and accommodations. For musicals and concerts, cross the river to the Lambertville Music Circus, an entertaining tent theater.

As you'd expect, eating in New Hope is an adventure. You can dine outdoors right along the canal at the Canal House, the Tow Path House, or the historic Logan Inn. At the Playhouse Inn, you'll view the river during dinner; at Chez Odette (south of town) or the River's Edge in Lambertville, you can catch the flavor of the theater world.

New Hope has far more than its share of history, too. At the Vansant house you can still see the marks made by British batteries firing from New Jersey in 1776. Just a few miles south is the spot where Washington staged his wintry crossing of the Delaware; in Washington Crossing State Park, you'll want to see Emil Leutze's famed painting of the crossing, climb the 100-foot stone tower on top of Bowman's hill, and wander the wildflower preserve.

SCOTTSDALE, ARIZONA

It's somehow reassuring to discover an old-style walking town like Scottsdale, far west of the Pecos. Here you can forget about freeways and urban sprawl. Just get out of your car, stretch your legs, and mosey down streets of fascinating shops, under rustic canopies that shade you block after block. Everything is designed—by law—to reflect an Old West theme.

Dress casually, of course, but don't mistake this for a cow town. The western and high-fashion apparel are nothing but the best. Many shops feature unusual gifts, jewelry, collectors' items, and antiques. In the craft and artisan shops, you will see skilled men and women working with materials as old as agate and leather, or as new as plastic and stainless steel.

Back east, Scottsdale would probably be described as a suburb. But many visitors (and even some Arizonans) have playfully suggested that next-door Phoenix be listed as the suburb of Scottsdale!

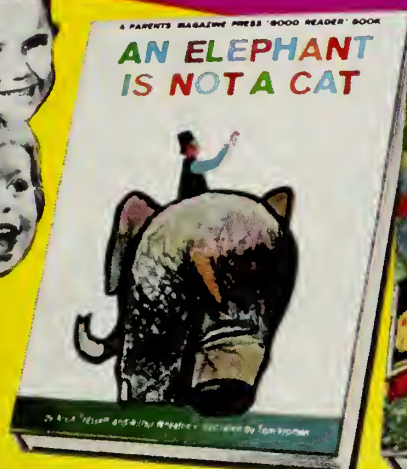

The busiest intersection in town is at Scottsdale Road and Indian School Road. Most of the better shops are located within two or three blocks of Scottsdale Road, not far north or south of Indian School. The best place to begin browsing is along colorful Fifth Avenue, marked by a prominent pink sign. Then go to Goldwaters Department Store in Scottsdale Fashion Square; it's a bizarre marble palace fit for an Oriental potentate. Afterward, you'll want to visit nearby Pima Plaza—especially after sundown when the gas lamps glow in the cool desert evening.

At Scottsdale and Main Streets, a unique signpost (an oversized replica of a cowboy) alerts you to important events—a rodeo, a parade, an Indian arts exhibit, a golf Tournament, a Chicago Cubs spring-training baseball game, or whatever. The cowboy also reminds you that Scottsdale is still the "West's most Western town."

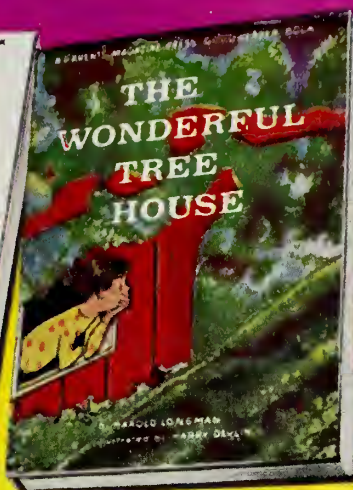

Even though Scottsdale is a great place for walking, don't overlook its more active sports. There are about 7,000 horses here—they even have the right of way over automobile traffic—and you'll see plenty of young and old riders enjoying the many fine trails. It's no trick to locate an excellent riding stable or guest ranch; the Scottsdale Chamber of Commerce will send you a list.

Arizona's desert views are world-famous, and some of the most memorable are on Camelback Mountain, within a cactus-throw of Scottsdale's city limits. Along the flanks of Camelback, you'll pass many beautiful estates, but you also can ride or hike through some spectacular open country on your way to the top.

But Scottsdale means fancy pools and golf courses, too—swimmable and playable all year. When you top off these civilized pleasures with nearly unfailing sunshine, it's no wonder people return home raving about Scottsdale. Summers are a bit on the fiery side at midday, but even the 100-degree days cool down rapidly after sunset. And if ever a city made air conditioning an unobtrusive way of life, Scottsdale deserves that honor.

Which leads us, at last, to the night life. In a word, Scottsdale swings. Choose your spot, from plush nightclub to "rinky-tink," rolled-up-sleeves piano bar. Hungry? You can get the finest French cuisine or a superlative hamburger, and there's always a friendly "howdy" for family groups at Scottsdale's restaurants.

Before you leave Scottsdale, take two special trips. First, roam the grounds of the Desert Botanical Gardens, where you can examine and identify hundreds of cacti and other desert plants; it's an intriguing place, so allow enough time for unhurried exploring. Then take a ten-minute drive to the late Frank Lloyd Wright's architectural school, Taliesin West. Guides will escort you on free tours of the buildings—nestled into the desert—9 to 5 Wednesdays and Saturdays, and noon to 5 Sundays.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICHIGAN

In frontier days, the French fur traders called it "le Grande Traverse," or Great Crossing. Today, Traverse City is the hub of a pine-forested vacationland of cool lakes and sparkling streams.

Set on the shore of Lake Michigan, 240 miles north of Detroit, it's also the undisputed family vacation city of northern Michigan. In May, thousands of blossoming cherry trees fill the air with perfume, and in July the National Cherry Festival attracts some 300,000 spectators. If you time your trip right, you'll witness colorful parades with floats and bands, plus races, water sports, and assorted contests. If you're caught without a Cherry Pie Tag (which you get after eating cherry pie), a "kangaroo court" puts you on trial and sentences you—to eat pie!

During the rest of the summer, Traverse City lives up to its reputation for fun. Within strolling distance of downtown lies Clinch Park, a unique shorefront center with a fascinating replica of the city. In the park you'll want to visit the zoo's exhibits of Michigan wildlife, and see Con Foster Museum's logging and pioneering artifacts. Youngsters will be charmed by the narrow-gauge railroad that puffs through the park every few minutes.

Besides Clinch Park, you'll find three other pleasant parks on the shore of Grand Traverse Bay. Nearby, the new Clinch Yacht Harbor berths up to 100 boats, and there are several private marinas for additional docking.

In a six-block strip downtown, just a block from the bay, cluster some of the town's most appealing shops. Here you can explore arts and crafts shops, bulging with original northern Michigan creations—jewelry, pottery, polished stones, woodcraft, and candles. At Grand Traverse Woolens, you can buy fine wool goods, and at the Maude Miller Art Gallery, you will see some really outstanding work. Other unique shops are the Log Cabin (jewelry, glass, and moccasins) and the House

OCRACOKE, NORTH CAROLINA

Few places on our continent are as remote as Ocracoke—a little fishing town that time forgot, way out on North Carolina's sand-strewn Outer Banks.

For nearly 200 years the fishermen of Ocracoke Island lived alone on this curving island barrier, where fierce seas and treacherous shoals claimed many a galleon and clipper ship. Only in the last few decades has Ocracoke Island been accessible, first by ferryboat from the south, and now by bridge and boat from the north. Even today, the dialect of the natives reflects this isolation, sounding more like Colonial English than our own.

As you drive along the 18-mile-long island, often just a half-mile across, the pungent smell of cedar mingles with the salty sea air. Marsh flats stretch toward vast Pamlico Sound to the west, and the Atlantic surf crashes beyond the high dunes to the east. If you climb over the dunes, you'll find great sections of deserted beach, often marked with the hulls of wrecked ships.

In Ocracoke village, this sense of remoteness really strikes you. At night, the streets are lit only by the fixed white beacon of the lighthouse—a 76-foot-high landmark that casts a steady beam for 14 miles. By day, the town's few whitewashed buildings glisten in the sun, and the fishing boats bob gently in the secluded, curving harbor.

Though commercial fishing once was the mainstay of this village of 500, many townsfolk now keep busy outfitting visitors for fishing—from deep-sea mile drive around Old Mission Peninsula, with its soaring lighthouse and peaceful state park.

Then take Highway M-22 north along the bay to the tip of the Leelanau Peninsula and the quiet fishing village of Leland. Don't miss the "Triangle Tour," which includes scenic gardens, sawmills, a Coast Guard station, and Sleeping Bear Sand Dunes, where you can ride a swooping "Dunes-mobile" (an open car with over-size tires). Traverse-area Indians have hung up their tomahawks, but your small-fry still can explore the sites of eight Indian villages, six burial grounds, and 55 mounds.

And for some of Michigan's

You'll get more out of a Philco.

Because you can get more in.

One 21-cubic-foot refrigerator doesn't necessarily give you the same amount of usable space as another 21-cubic-foot refrigerator.

Take the Philco side-by-side shown here as an example. It measures 21 cubic feet, just as a lot of other refrigerators do. But the fact is, it holds more food.

How come? Because like all Philco refrigerators it's designed to make maximum use of all available space.

Shelves are roomy and slide out to help you load the refrigerator with greatest economy of space. They're adjustable, too. You move them up or down to make enough space, but never waste it. Even the deep door shelves are adjustable. You can choose from 98 shelf arrangements in the freezer door alone.

Philco saves space another way, too. Special thin insulation material makes outside dimensions smaller. And bigger-capacity refrigerators often fit in the same space a "smaller" one used to fill.

For more convenience and less work, Philco refrigerators like the 21-cubic-foot side-by-side shown here never have to be defrosted. There's "no frost" in the refrigerator side. And "no frost" in the freezer side. In fact, the only place ice ever forms is in the automatic ice maker, where it belongs.

So if you're fed up with trying to cram things into a refrigerator that wastes so much space that it's still half empty when it's "full," just remember, you'll get more out of Philco... because you can get more in.

trips to surf casting. From the middle of April until the middle of June (and again in October), surf casting for channel bass is at its peak; cobia fishing is good in June and July, and blues and mackerel hit well in July and August. You can rent small boats by the day, or charter a party boat for six (half-day or full-day trips, with tackle, bait, and ice furnished).

For ocean swimming, the National Park Service provides a protected area, complete with lifeguards; if you head for other beaches, be sure you're a good swimmer because the tides are tricky. In any case, don't miss an evening stroll along the beaches, where millions of phosphorescent plankton twinkle and gleam in the water.

Except for community square dances on summer evenings (and the fiery plankton display), Ocracoke is quiet at night. You'll find good eating at several restaurants, with the emphasis on seafood dishes and local specialties like cantaloupe pie, sweet-potato biscuits, and pickled figs. Hotels and motels are comfortable, and there are two campgrounds in the National Seashore.

To see the island up close, take a guided jeep tour, done in colorful, Ocracoke style by native guides. You'll make frequent stops along the beach for seashells and driftwood, study fascinating epitaphs on old tombstones, and visit Blackbeard's Cove, where the infamous pirate hid his ship between sorties.

Plan a day or so for your own excursions, too. To the north lies Hatteras Island, similar to Ocracoke but larger and not as remote. At Nags Head you'll find one of North Carolina's best beaches, and near Kitty Hawk, a monument and museum marking the Wright brothers' first flight. In Manteo, see Fort Raleigh, where in 1585 and 1587 Sir Walter attempted to establish a colony; besides the fort, there's a museum, an outdoor drama called "The Lost Colony" (summers only)—and nearby, the immaculate Elizabethan gardens.

If you're traveling to Ocracoke Island from the north, take the new bridge across Oregon Inlet to Hatteras Island, then the free, 45-minute ferry ride to Ocracoke. From the south, it's a 2½-hour ferry from Cedar Island across Ocracoke Inlet ($5 per car, including all passengers; 50 cents for pedestrians; $1 for bicycle and rider). For schedule information, write the Dare County Tourist Bureau, Manteo, N.C.

DEADWOOD, SOUTH DAKOTA

In Deadwood—famed gold rush camp of the Black Hills—you're at the home base of some of the early West's most fascinating characters—Wild Bill Hickok, Calamity Jane, Deadwood Dick, Potato Creek Johnny, and Poker Alice.

Squeezed picturesquely into a pine-dotted canyon, Deadwood erupted in 1876 with the discovery of gold in Deadwood and Whitewood creeks. Prospectors crowded elbow to elbow along Deadwood Creek—right next to Main Street—staking claims, quarreling, getting rich, going broke.

Before placer mining faded, the population rose to a riotous 25,000, with gamblers and saloonkeepers doing their best to keep the demand for gold high. Today's 4,000 residents fill the gulch to overflowing, with homes and businesses climbing the steep canyon walls. Level ground is at such a premium that the new four-lane highway through town was built atop Deadwood Creek.

Pick up a free map of historic sites at the Chamber of Commerce; then start along Main Street, still the hub of Deadwood activity. Here, in the original Saloon Number 10 (now gone), Wild Bill Hickok was shot in the back by Crooked Nose Jack McCall on August 2, 1876; Wild Bill, playing cards, was holding pairs of black aces and eights—known to poker players today as a “dead man’s hand.”

At 7:30 each night you can watch the “capture” of Jack McCall; then join the crowd and follow McCall to the Old Towne Hall for his bizarre trial, where you may even be picked for jury duty. Reserved tickets are $1.35, general admission $1 (children 25 cents).

Today a few old-time saloons still dot Main Street, reminders of the 60 or more that served steep, narrow road up the canyon to Mount Moriah cemetery, where Hickok, Calamity Jane, and Seth Bullock (organizer of Teddy Roosevelt’s Rough Riders) are buried. From this bluff, you’ll see Deadwood far below, surrounded by the pine-clad mountains of Black Hills National Forest.

Across from Mount Moriah is Sunset Mountain, where the infamous Deadwood Dick is buried. Children (and most parents) love the hour-long horseback ride to his grave site from the Don Ostby stables ($2 an hour).

To see Deadwood at its wild-est, plan to be here during the Days of ’76 Celebration, held the first weekend in August. Then you’ll get a taste of the Old West as cowboys crowd Main Street, and Indians set up their tepees.

Before you leave, take a trip to a working gold mine in Lead (pronounced “leed”), three miles from Deadwood. On the way, get in the mining mood by stopping at Broken Boot Mine, where a guide takes you through its musty, abandoned tunnels (adults 50 cents; children 25 cents). At Central City, try your hand at panning for gold (any nuggets you find are yours). Then in Lead, tour the Homestake—largest gold mine in the western hemisphere. Once one of the richest sites, it now processes a ton of ore to produce just one-third of an ounce of gold.

NATCHEZ, MISSISSIPPI

When it comes to preserving the romantic character of the antebellum South, Natchez is second to none. Everywhere monuments celebrate the elegance of cotton-boom times, which stretched from the Spanish occupation of the 1700s to the fall of the Confederacy in 1865. Thirty magnificent mansions, most of them faced with tall columns, offer visitors a look backward into a more courtly way of life. Many of these showplaces are living museums, still inhabited by descendants of the original builders. Several are open to visitors all year long.

During the annual Pilgrim-age each March and April, the 30 mansions are open simultaneously. Then all Natchez takes on a colorful, nostalgic look. Confederate cavalry uniforms dot the gatherings, and the strains of Dixie fill the air.

In the evenings, the Little Theater stages the entertaining “Southern Exposure,” a raucous spoof of Natchez’s past.

To plan your own tour, pick up maps and official guides (including a detailed walking tour) at the Chamber of Commerce. In case you lose your way, the local ladies have marked sight-seeing routes with signs shaped like a hoop-skirted belle.

And if you want to dine in style during your tour, plan a stop at the Carriage House; one of the town’s best restaurants, it’s set in the courtyard of palatial Stanton Hall.

While you’re touring the mansions, mix in some stops at Natchez’s intriguing shops. At Belleview, where Jefferson Davis courted his wife-to-be, the Brown-Barnett Shop blends antiques with modern, and at the “Dixie” house, you’ll want to browse Tom Ketchings’ fine antique shop.

On the corner of Canal and Jefferson, John B. Lombardo’s place is filled with ancient china, linens, and relics from Southern estates—as well as a collection of wooden patterns for casting steamboat parts. In the shop of H. L. Baker, on Franklin Street, you’ll see a wild jumble of guns, furniture, hardware, tools, flint arrowheads, and steamboat models.

The Trading Post—a log cabin at the side of old French Fort Rosalie—reflects the tongue-in-cheek attitude that often leavens the reverence of Natchez for its past. Among the needlecraft purses, Indian baskets, and antique valentines are items solemnly advertised as persimmon butter, camellia conserve—and corncob jelly.

FAMILY HEALTH

WHAT SHOULD A GOOD PHYSICAL EXAM TELL YOU?

Most doctors agree that American children get the world's best medical care—largely because of the periodic checkups so many of them receive. These checkups make it possible for pediatricians to practice true preventive medicine, to maintain health rather than treat sickness. Unfortunately, the habit of getting regular checkups is less common among adults. The typical grownup, therefore, would be wise to heed his youngsters' example.

WHY HAVE A HEALTH EXAMINATION?

If a doctor thoroughly examines you and finds no sign of trouble, your resultant peace of mind repays your effort. If he detects some early indication of disease, that problem can be treated with greater success—and at the cost of less money, less time, and less discomfort—than if its discovery had been delayed.

It could even make a life-or-death difference to you, because the usefulness of many new medical techniques is confined to the earliest stages of disease, before any overt symptoms appear.

These are the most obvious benefits of a checkup, but they are not the only ones. Seeing your doctor at regular intervals enables him to keep an eye on your general condition, and to supervise your exercise and diet. He is able to offer counsel on such habits as smoking and drinking.

All this strengthens your feeling of rapport with your doctor, and provides you with a chance to get authoritative answers to questions pertaining to medicine.

WHAT SHOULD A GOOD PHYSICAL EXAM TELL YOU?

Finally, the results of the tests you receive could be useful in interpreting future threats to your health, when new findings should be compared against old.

WHAT YOUR PERIODIC CHECKUP SHOULD INCLUDE

First comes a talk about your medical history. If the doctor has seen you on previous occasions, he is already familiar with your general background and only needs to be brought up to date.

A doctor who lacks this prior information will present you with a long list of questions, beginning with the date and place of your birth and including all aspects of your health. What diseases have you had? What operations? What accidents? Any aftereffects you're aware of? Do you suffer from any allergy? Do you often use drugs or medicines—sleep producers, tranquilizers, pep pills, vitamins, aspirin? If your parents are living, describe their state of health. If they're dead, what caused their deaths? Does any illness seem to run in your family? The list continues.

Ever had an emotional crisis? Do you usually feel healthy or are you often out of sorts—excessively tired or depressed? How frequently do you experience an upset stomach? Headaches? Colds? Sore throat? Have you allowed your immunizations to lapse? Does your weight remain constant or fluctuate? Do you ever go on diets? What kind? If you smoke, how much? If you drink, how often? What do you do in your job? Do you like it? How many hours of sleep do you average? Do you follow a regular exercise program? Are you tense or under pressure at home or at work? What do you do to relax? How do you spend your vacations?

With these answers recorded, your doctor can proceed to the physical examination itself. First he receives a general impression from your posture, your walk, the appearance of your skin, your weight distribution, your speech. Then he weighs you, measures you, and monitors your pulse; sometimes he will take additional pulse readings after a minute or so of mild exercise.

With a few simple instruments he probes deeper. He listens to your heartbeat and breathing, studies your ears, examines the small blood vessels in the retinas of your eyes, tests your reflexes, looks into your throat, records your temperature, and gauges your blood pressure. If you are over 40, he'll probably measure the pressure of fluid in your eyes to guard against the threat of glaucoma.

The physician's constant kneading and probing of your body is a necessary part of each physical. By feeling and massaging your neck, for example, he gets vital information about the size of your thyroid gland, the condition of your blood vessels, and the presence or absence of swollen lymph nodes. He determines your heart's size and position by thumping your chest and back. And he feels all over your body, of course, for any lump or small growth that might signify an early warning of cancer. Pelvic and breast examinations for women are particularly designed with this in mind, as are rectal and proctoscopic exams for both sexes. They should not be left out of your physical.

Certain laboratory tests will also be included. A urine specimen and a blood sample are the most common. Many doctors routinely take an X-ray of your chest and, especially if you're over 35, an electrocardiogram of your heartbeat—though this last, strictly speaking, is not a laboratory test. In addition, all women should have a Pap smear test for the detection of cervical cancer.

The doctor evaluates the results of these tests and combines them with the evidence from his physical examination and the facts revealed in your medical history. He may then request additional tests—of which there are literally dozens, even hundreds—to check further in specific areas. But in the absence of any unusual discoveries, submitting to more tests usually isn't necessary.

The last step in a thorough health examination—and one you should always insist on—is the conference between you and your doctor when he interprets his findings, answers your questions, and offers recommendations on ways you might safeguard your health. Such counseling often touches on exercise programs, smoking, and diet.

This talk may be held immediately after the exam—when the doctor must assume that your laboratory tests will show nothing he doesn't suspect—or he may prefer to postpone the talk until later, when every piece of evidence is in. He may also present you with a written report, including a summary of recommendations that serves as a handy reminder. He might further suggest that, as long as you're there, you receive any immunizations you need, and then schedule your next routine checkup.

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS, AUGUST, 1967

WHICH LABORATORY TESTS— AND WHY

Since the lab work is performed in the patient's absence, and since normal findings often go unmentioned, many patients are unsure about the purpose of these tests.

The X-ray of your chest is primarily intended to spot early indications of lung cancer, tuberculosis, and certain afflictions of heart and blood vessels. But additional X-rays might be indicated, to examine your gastrointestinal tract in the so-called "G.I. series."

The situation is much the same with your blood test: the number of studies that could be performed is much larger than the number usually called for. Your doctor will routinely take a white blood cell count; an unusually high number suggests a hidden infection. He will also ask for a red blood cell count, plus a hemoglobin determination, to check for anemia. Unless you have had one previously, he will routinely run a test for syphilis.

The doctor may also measure your cholesterol level to gauge your susceptibility to arteriosclerosis, hypertension, heart attack, or stroke. He may measure the sedimentation rate (the speed with which red corpuscles in a treated blood sample settle to the bottom of a test tube) for hints of one of several diseases. Findings from tests like these may prove useful for later comparison—just as an electrocardiogram of a heart in perfect health helps interpret other tracings of that same heart if something ever goes wrong.

To conclude laboratory tests of your blood, he might measure the sugar content—a test for diabetes, and a more sensitive one than urinalysis.

WHO SHOULD PERFORM THE EXAM?

The person best suited to administer your checkup is your personal or family physician; the knowledge he has gained from treating you before is useful in interpreting the findings. Theoretically, another doctor can extract this information from the questions he asks about your medical history. But in even the most thorough interrogation, facts you regard as unimportant are likely to pass unnoticed. Also, your rapport with your family doctor means an honest and friendly exchange of information, without which any checkup loses value.

Sometimes it may be more reasonable for others to perform the exam. Many companies, for example, have contracts with clinics to examine their employees each year. Many unions have similar plans.

Your doctor may send you to a clinic himself if he lacks the equipment or the specialized knowledge to administer some elaborate or complicated test. But even when he doesn't examine you himself, your doctor should always be informed of every checkup you receive and have access to the results of any test related to a physical exam.

If you are currently without a family physician, a checkup provides a good opportunity to find one.

WHAT IT COSTS IN TIME AND MONEY

A doctor familiar with your medical background can often complete a periodic checkup in little more than an hour. When special tests are indicated, it will obviously take longer—conceivably stretching over two or three days and requiring your admission to a hospital. But overnight confinement is rare. An extremely thorough examination can be efficiently performed in four hours—either in one day or during two or more appointments.

The price will depend on how long the checkup takes, the number and nature of the laboratory tests, what section of the country you happen to live in, and the doctor. Some doctors in rural communities give routine checkups to their regular patients for as little as $5 or $10. Specialists in metropolitan areas may give a deluxe checkup that runs $250 or more. The average for a checkup that consumes about an hour of your time is $15 to $40.

If you go to a specialized clinic for your checkup, you will often be offered a choice of examinations. One typical group in New York City, the Life Extension Institute, invites patients to select from among three. They range from a standard checkup that takes two hours and costs $40, to a very comprehensive exam that takes four hours and costs $85.

HOW OFTEN SHOULD A DOCTOR EXAMINE YOU?

The answer depends on your age and state of health. Once every two or three years may suffice if you are under 35. After 35, you should be examined yearly; after 50, every six months may not be too often.

But a number of factors can overrule this schedule, so it's best to let your doctor decide. If you see him fairly often, perhaps he'll let you skip one now and then. On the other hand, he may advise more numerous checkups to keep a sharp eye on anything suspicious. Continued

Such counseling often touches on exercise programs, smoking, and diet.

This talk may be held immediately after the exam—when the doctor must assume that your laboratory tests will show nothing he doesn't suspect—or he may prefer to postpone the talk until later, when every piece of evidence is in. He may also present you with a written report, including a summary of recommendations that serves as a handy reminder. He might further suggest that, as long as you're there, you receive any immunizations you need, and then schedule your next routine checkup.

WHICH LABORATORY TESTS— AND WHY

Since the lab work is performed in the patient's absence, and since normal findings often go unmentioned, many patients are unsure about the purpose of these tests.

The X-ray of your chest is primarily intended to spot early indications of lung cancer, tuberculosis, and certain afflictions of heart and blood vessels. But additional X-rays might be indicated, to examine your gastrointestinal tract in the so-called "G.I. series."

The situation is much the same with your blood test: the number of studies that could be performed is much larger than the number usually called for. Your doctor will routinely take a white blood cell count; an unusually high number suggests a hidden infection. He will also ask for a red blood cell count, plus a hemoglobin determination, to check for anemia. Unless you have had one previously, he will routinely run a test for syphilis.

The doctor may also measure your cholesterol level to gauge your susceptibility to arteriosclerosis, hypertension, heart attack, or stroke. He may measure the sedimentation rate (the speed with which red corpuscles in a treated blood sample settle to the bottom of a test tube) for hints of one of several diseases. Findings from tests like these may prove useful for later comparison—just as an electrocardiogram of a heart in perfect health helps interpret other tracings of that same heart if something ever goes wrong.

To conclude laboratory tests of your blood, he might measure the sugar content—a test for diabetes, and a more sensitive one than urinalysis.

WHO SHOULD PERFORM THE EXAM?

The person best suited to administer your checkup is your personal or family physician; the knowledge he has gained from treating you before is useful in interpreting the findings. Theoretically, another doctor can extract this information from the questions he asks about your medical history. But in even the most thorough interrogation, facts you regard as unimportant are likely to pass unnoticed. Also, your rapport with your family doctor means an honest and friendly exchange of information, without which any checkup loses value.

Sometimes it may be more reasonable for others to perform the exam. Many companies, for example, have contracts with clinics to examine their employees each year. Many unions have similar plans.

Your doctor may send you to a clinic himself if he lacks the equipment or the specialized knowledge to administer some elaborate or complicated test. But even when he doesn't examine you himself, your doctor should always be informed of every checkup you receive and have access to the results of any test related to a physical exam.

If you are currently without a family physician, a checkup provides a good opportunity to find one.

WHAT IT COSTS IN TIME AND MONEY

A doctor familiar with your medical background can often complete a periodic checkup in little more than an hour. When special tests are indicated, it will obviously take longer—conceivably stretching over two or three days and requiring your admission to a hospital. But overnight confinement is rare. An extremely thorough examination can be efficiently performed in four hours—either in one day or during two or more appointments.

The price will depend on how long the checkup takes, the number and nature of the laboratory tests, what section of the country you happen to live in, and the doctor. Some doctors in rural communities give routine checkups to their regular patients for as little as $5 or $10. Specialists in metropolitan areas may give a deluxe checkup that runs $250 or more. The average for a checkup that consumes about an hour of your time is $15 to $40.

If you go to a specialized clinic for your checkup, you will often be offered a choice of examinations. One typical group in New York City, the Life Extension Institute, invites patients to select from among three. They range from a standard checkup that takes two hours and costs $40, to a very comprehensive exam that takes four hours and costs $85.

HOW OFTEN SHOULD A DOCTOR EXAMINE YOU?

The answer depends on your age and state of health. Once every two or three years may suffice if you are under 35. After 35, you should be examined yearly; after 50, every six months may not be too often.

But a number of factors can overrule this schedule, so it's best to let your doctor decide. If you see him fairly often, perhaps he'll let you skip one now and then. On the other hand, he may advise more numerous checkups to keep a sharp eye on anything suspicious. Continued

WHAT SHOULD A GOOD PHYSICAL EXAM TELL YOU?

Some doctors think a checkup every year is too frequent for middle-aged patients in good health. They point out a psychological danger: when a patient gets a clean bill of health every year, he begins to view checkups as a waste of time and money and—just at the age when they become most important—he may discontinue them.

If your doctor shares this view, he may suggest a different schedule, extend the interval between checkups, or modify the tests he administers. He might ask you to submit to screening tests outside his office. Examples include X-rays subsidized by Christmas Seal sales; visits to specialists; or examination by doctors who are retained by your place of business, your military reserve unit, or your life insurance company.

WHAT NOT TO EXPECT FROM A CHECKUP

Doctors and public health officials often use the "automobile analogy" when trying to persuade more Americans to have periodic health examinations. They point out that your health is more important than your car, yet the typical American takes his car in for checkups more frequently than he gets them himself. This analogy must not be carried too far. For one thing, a mechanic who discovers a defect will usually repair or replace the faulty part and return your car in better condition. Not so with a medical checkup. A health defect brought to the examining room is still in your possession when you leave.

A checkup does not imply treatment. The doctor will inform you if anything seems wrong and will recommend appropriate action. It is your responsibility to follow that advice; otherwise, the checkup is wasted.

If your family physician presides at your checkup, and if he finds a condition that requires medical care, he will probably schedule another appointment to begin the treatment. However, any other examiner will simply tell you what the checkup revealed and instruct you to share it with your doctor. If you keep the information to yourself, you alone are to blame should the condition persist or grow worse.

You also are burdened with the responsibility for changing your daily regimen—exercise, diet, relaxation, and so on—in keeping with what the checkup discloses. Don't ever pretend to yourself that advice is valuable in the absence of action. Your health does not improve when you are told to stop smoking; the benefits start only when you do it.

One final fact to remember: if the examining doctor discovers nothing wrong, that does not represent a guarantee. There can be no assurance your good health will continue until the next routine checkup is scheduled; so never ignore symptoms in the meantime.

Nor can the doctor be absolutely certain you are free from immediate danger. Disease can be a very stealthy predator indeed—sometimes capable of avoiding detection during even the most careful search. Just two days after a doctor had examined him and found no hint of what was to come, Lyndon Johnson had his famous heart attack. A checkup reduces the chances of such surprises as far as your doctor can reduce them, but certainty is still beyond his grasp.

Mrs. Bauer gave up trying to stop all the spills (now she stops the stains)

Mrs. Bauer simply sprays SCOTCHGARD® Fabric Protector on everything she wants to protect from stains. In fact, just about everything you see in the picture has been treated. Hats, jackets, dresses, sweaters, pants, the upholstered chair . . . even the tablecloth.

Then most of her family's spills won't leave a stain. Not even something as sticky as a popsicle. Not gravy or butter or coffee or even salad dressing.

Such spilly stuff just sits up on SCOTCHGARD Protector's invisible stain barrier so you can blot it off with an absorbent tissue. SCOTCHGARD Fabric Protector won't affect the look or feel of any fabric. Makes outdoorwear rain repellent, too.

Next time you're in a hardware or department store, buy a spray can of SCOTCHGARD Fabric Protector and test it on a tie . . . until you're convinced.

This is what you clean Teflon with. Tuffy.

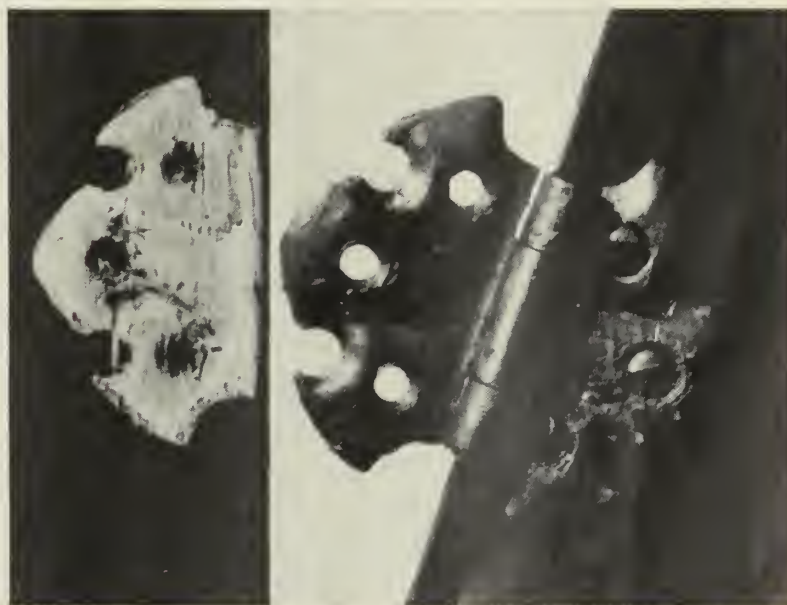

Didn't you know? Food leaves a greasy film on Teflon that builds up and makes the non-stick stick. Plain soapy water won't get it off. That takes Tuffy®. This nice little ball of plastic mesh. It gets the grease off. But it won't scratch Teflon. Or you-name-it. It just keeps things from going to pot.

BLACK AND WHITE PLUS A COLOR . . .

By Peg Rumely, Home Furnishings Editor
Nelda Cordts, Associate Editor

You can't go wrong with this decorating scheme—because black and white are both neutral, and a color clash with either of them is impossible. Not only that, these two “non-colors” do something positive and exciting for whatever color you play against them. You'll see what we mean in color schemes on this and the following pages.

Left: Impact of Pure Red—Brilliant red is far and away the most popular color with black and white. There's a good reason: black makes red bolder, and white makes it brighter. It's all in the way you handle the fireworks. Here black, white, and red are used in almost equal proportions. A strong play of patterns and textures relieves what could be a too stark look. Soft texture appears in the felt that covers the wall, in the corduroy sleeper sofa, and in the alpaca fur area rug. Pattern dominates in the red paisley fabric of the window shades and the wall covering below the windows. Note how dramatically the paisley print is strengthened through the contrast with black and white. Stark white mats make the black and white Japanese prints stand out against the black wall.

Upper right: Just a Slight Jolt of Red—A little bit of red can say a lot. Here, the black and white pattern itself creates such decorating interest that only a splash of bright red is necessary. Dominating the window wall are sailcloth draperies patterned with a French Normandy country scene. The pattern is repeated in the quilted bedspread and valance. Not all patterns bear repeating to this extent, but this serene scenic in black and white is never overpowering. Red adds its blaze in the area rug, dust ruffle of the bed, pillows, and poppies. Restating the black and white story are the artfully arranged small paintings on the wall, and the cane-back love seat.

Lower right: The Fun of Hot Pink—In an old kitchen, pink stimulates the black and white scene. On the walls, a pineapple-design wallpaper and sparkling white tile make an interesting interplay of pattern and solids. Spoonholder and sconces dating from the 18th century add charm to this kitchen-dining area. Pink is introduced through seat cushions, place mats, gay strawflowers, candles, and table accessories. Without much effort or expense, another color could replace the pink for a new effect. See how easy it is to work with the black and white scheme—it always stays in good taste with any color switch.

BLACK AND WHITE PLUS GREEN . . .

Photograph: Hedrich-Blessing; Decorator: James R. Teetzel; Data: Liz Noah

Right: Congenial Chartreuse—If red is the most popular accent color with a black and white scheme, green is a close runner-up. However, the effect is quite different. Black and white plus green has a pleasantly sedative effect as opposed to the stimulation of red. In chartreuse the serenity of green is touched by the liveliness of yellow. It fits well into this many-purpose room located just off a kitchen. The room is used as a sitting room, breakfast room, and game room. Patterns are scaled small to avoid a busy look in the limited space. Fine-striped ticking slipcovers the bed sofa; wallpaper is a small floral overprint on a skinny stripe; vinyl floor covering is a muted splatter pattern. Plastic shell chairs and table are light and airy, yet tough enough for the many activities of the room. The woven blind behind the decorative shade helps block the strong afternoon sun from the window.

Photograph: Hedrich-Blessing; Decorator: Evelyn LeRoy, N.S.I.D.; Data: Jessie Walker

Upper left: Soft Green-Blue—This restful, feminine aquamarine goes well in this bedroom for two girls. There's a young-of-mind pattern mix: stripes with plaids. Stripes are used to make the walls seem taller in this low-ceiling room. They also fool the eye by diminishing the depth of the ungainly wall jog. Wardrobe chests placed back to back in the center of the room and a corner storage chest-bedside table save precious space. Recessed spotlights are angled for individual use.

Lower left: Pure and Simple Green—This green is an equal mixture of its components, blue and yellow. In this pure state, the green itself becomes neutral: it can go with anything. Thus we have three neutrals—black, white, and green. To stir up excitement, this living room combines those colors through imaginative fabric contrasts: stripes on the side chair, flame-stitch pattern on the sofa, and solid black on the big lounge chair. White vinyl shades are hung behind window frames built of plywood covered with the same black burlap used on the walls. A fringed white area rug defines the conversation grouping and brings out the best in the verdant green.

BLACK AND WHITE PLUS YELLOW . . .

Left: A Wealth of Yellow-Gold—This makes an excellent foil for black and white when you want a rich atmosphere (in a dining room, for example). Artists of the Italian Renaissance used gold lavishly for just that reason. No bold pattern or texture is present here—but the color scheme, furnishings, and accessories give all the variety this handsome room can use. Ceiling and walls are painted black to emphasize the pristine whiteness of the dining chairs, the glow of the yellow carpeting, and the gloss of the lacquered buffet. Mirror wall behind the buffet gives the room depth and repeats the sparkle of candlelight and the gleam of white china and accessories.

Upper right: A Flash of Yellow—With this stunning show of stripes, only a dash of bright-as-a-buttercup yellow is required for accent. The black and white stripes—big, bold, and emphatic—perform decorating magic in this small den. They stretch space by leading the eye upward. So this illusion won't be dispelled, the sofa's upholstery repeats the stripes of the wall. Fool-the-eye tricks like this are easy when you work with the black and white scheme. Just remember that black advances while white recedes. In this small room, extra white is used to take advantage of its expanding powers. Because yellow—bright or subdued—is always uplifting, it's a good choice in a room reserved for study and relaxing.

Lower right: Mellow Coppery-Yellow—You wouldn't expect to find burnished yellows with a black and white scheme, but it's a winning combination. Here the yellows range from deep coppery tones to rich apricots and pale honey. The effect is soft and warm—a perfect background for the decisive black and white hounds-tooth pattern. It comes on strong—covering the sofa bed, the club chair, and even the movable wood screen. The fabric on the screen is a dressmaker sheer wool, chosen because of its excellent draping qualities. One wall of the room is paneled with wood painted black to underscore the rich coppery-yellow of the burlap-covered walls.

BLACK AND WHITE PLUS BLUE . . .

Right: Bristol Blue—Brilliant blue is another fresh, newsmaking color with black and white. Never has blue looked bluer than in this setting. In this room, two quite different patterns—a strong, masculine houndstooth check and a lady-like toile print—agree surprisingly well. Walls are covered with a char-black grass cloth. A blue area rug, blue lamp bases, and white shades contrast strikingly against this darkish background. Carefully selected accessories effectively point up the refreshing color scheme. Even the pictures restate black, white, and blue. Because the blue appears in the accent pieces, it could easily be swapped for a new color—another instance of the wonderful flexibility of the black-and-white-plus-color scheme.

Upper left: Lift of Lavender—Black and white make another color look especially sharp and smart in a bathroom, because it's so small. That's why we recommend a bathroom for your first experiment with this color scheme. Lavender—the color exclamation here—offers a delightful switch from the usual, but it does call for careful handling. The various shades and hues of lavender are complex and can be tricky. For example, one shade of lavender can gray another close-by, or even turn it blue. To be on the safe side, always work with swatches when you use lavender. Here pattern is rampant, wild, and fun. Remember, anything goes—with black and white. This bathroom bears witness, with real decorating impact.

Lower left: Frosted Blue—A mere froth of a color can pack a powerful wallop when you project it against black and white. This shimmering, fragile blue proves our point. It is another of the unexpected and out-of-the-ordinary colors—strong or delicate—which are making decorating news when teamed with black and white. In this dining room, pattern is again used with beautiful abandon—certainly a refreshing departure from those old fears of “pattern-clash.” A make-believe crocodile vinyl wraps the T-square table, and a striking bamboo print gives an outdoor look to the wall and screens. Shiny white vinyl covers other walls. Then for a hard-hitting contrast: a floor of black tile. To temper the shine, texture enters the scene in the dual wicker shells with glass shelves, the wicker chairs, and the softly gathered folds of the curtains.

TIRES HAVE CHANGED.... DO YOU REALLY KNOW HOW TO MAKE THE RIGHT CHOICE THIS YEAR?

Twenty-five years ago there were two kinds of tires for your car—blackwall and white-wall. Today you may find as many as ten different tires in a given size, all carrying the same brand name. And there are over 100 brands produced by the 19 manufacturers.

You can choose from rayon, nylon, or polyester cord; or fiber glass cord in a belted tire. There are first, second, and third line; premium and high-performance premium; and wide-tread contours. You can get two-ply, four-ply, belted-bias ply, or radial ply. You will see black and white sidewalls, plus sidewalls with a variety of colored strips. You can buy a tire for less than $10 or for over $100.

To help guide you in tire buying, the Federal Trade Commission now requires that there be molded on the sidewall of the tire its size, whether tube or tubeless, and the actual number of plies (on radials it will just say "radial"). In addition, a tag or label is required that gives the type cord material used, the tire's load-carrying capacity, and the recommended cold inflation pressure.

The matter of uniform grading for tires, required by the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966, is still being studied by the government and manufacturers. To date, no standards have been set, and grading is anything but uniform. Present plans call for a uniform grade labeling system to be established by September, 1968, and in use by September, 1969.

Don't let terms such as "100 level" mislead you. This still is an arbitrary rating established by individual manufacturers within their own product lines. One brand's "100 level" tire may be equal to, better than, or of less quality than another's. Standardization of such terms is one of Washington's goals.

So how do you select from the baffling assortment of tires that will fit your car? Your first consideration should be need: what you expect the tires to do for you. Will most of your driving be long trips at high speeds? Will you be hauling heavy loads? Will the car be used only for around-town driving? After determining what sort of wear and stress the tires must withstand, the next thing to investigate is what choices you might have within this framework.

If price were no factor, nearly everyone would be riding on premium grade tires. Premiums contain a longer wearing rubber and more of it, have a heavier carcass, a wider and deeper tread, and provide longer tread life. If you travel long distances at top legal turnpike speeds or haul heavy loads, you'd do well to invest in a high-performance premium tire.

A comparative newcomer, the wide-tread contour, is included in the optional or premium tire group, and is offered as standard or optional equipment on a few new cars. These tires are particularly popular with owners of American sport and high-performance cars. However, they are not suitable for use on some standard cars because of limited clearance in wheel wells, suspension components, and steering mechanisms. When replacing conventional tires with wide-tread contours, be sure the proper replacement size is used.

Since economics must be considered, it's a good idea to begin your shopping with the tires that came on your car from the manufacturer. These are first line tires. Here again the 100 level category creeps into the picture, so don't be misled. Some brands have their own 100 level products which may or may not meet the standards required for original equipment tires.

If the original equipment tires served you well, you may want to replace them with identical ones—unless you decide to invest a little more for longer wearing tires, or your driving requirements change. Original equipment tires are designed for "normal" driving. If you plan to do a lot of long distance and/or high speed driving, or to pull a trailer or otherwise load down your car, consider upgrading to the next larger size or to an eight-ply-rated tire. If additional mileage is desired beyond that you obtained from the original tires, you may want to consider premium or high-performance tires.

About 90 percent of all tire failures occur during the last 10 percent of tread life. An investment of 10 to 20 percent more to move up a grade will provide good returns in increased tread life and tire service throughout the life of the tire.

Moving up a grade usually results in more tread rubber. However, moving up to a premium tire isn't the answer for all types of driving. In every instance a premium or super-premium tire will have more tread rubber and will give longer tread life. But the additional rubber also means greater heat buildup, which makes some premium tires unsuitable for extended driving at turnpike speeds. Assess your driving needs carefully and if you do considerable turnpike driving, high-performance tires would be a wiser choice.

Moving down, second and third line tires (sometimes described as fine for around-town driving) have less rubber and consequently a narrower and shallower tread. This means a shorter tread life and less resistance to cuts and abrasions. However, the load rating remains the same and they can be safely driven at the same legal speeds provided they are properly inflated and not overloaded.

TIRES CORD MATERIALS

Nylon, used as original equipment on many high-performance cars, performs well at high speeds, but it produces a slightly harsher ride than rayon and tends to flatten out or "flat spot" when the car is parked for any length of time. This causes a slight thump for the first few miles of driving, but soon smooths out. Because of its high-speed durability, nylon currently enjoys an edge in replacement tires (74 percent of the market).

Rayon is still used in standard equipment tires on most new cars because it contributes to a more flexible tire which gives a smoother ride. Also it provides good tread life and does not "flat spot." Rayon is used in the belt cords of most U.S. produced radial-ply tires.

Polyester, relatively new to the marketplace, combines the smooth ride of rayon and the high-speed performance of nylon. It is being used in the standard equipment tires on several new cars. Some manufacturers feel it shows promise of eventually providing the happy medium between rayon and nylon. One major company has extended the use of polyester to its top three tire lines.

Fiber glass is now being used in a belted-bias ply tire that combines some of the best characteristics of radial and conventional tires. This very durable material demonstrates superior strength under tension and in compression, and could be a real contender in the tire cord field.

PLIES

Some buyers still believe that four plies are bound to be twice as strong as two plies. Actually, two-ply cords are twice as strong as those used in four-ply tires; a two-ply/four-ply rated tire has the same load rating as a full four-ply tire of the same size. A relatively new four-ply/eight-ply rated tire (intended for station wagons, consistently overloaded cars, and some pickup trucks) has a load rating considerably greater than that of a four-ply tire.

At left, a typical pre-1965 tire. Center, today's standard tires with wider tread and lower profile. Right, the new wide tread contour (70 series) —about the same height but much wider tread.

Cords in a two-ply/four-ply rated tire are larger and twice as strong as those in a four-ply tire; thus the load rating for a given size tire is the same.

Tests show that two-ply/four-ply rated tires cause up to 40 percent less trouble than four-plys. They run cooler at high speeds—they are lighter and have fewer plies so there's less internal friction and less heat buildup. They are also less apt to bruise or rupture, because their flexibility allows them to take chuck holes, rocks, and bumps more smoothly. This flexibility is an advantage in steering and cornering, and results in a more comfortable ride.

Radial ply tires (see Better Homes and Gardens, March, 1967) contribute to better gas mileage. They improve traction, last longer, provide good high-speed performance and puncture resistance. Radials are not yet available for all cars; they cost about $10 more per tire, but are considered by some to be the tires of the future.

WHAT SIZE TO BUY

With the advent of low-profile, wide-tread, and radial ply tires, a whole new size structure has emerged. In the case of wide-tread and radial plies, it's extremely important that you obtain the proper replacement size to avoid handling and road stability problems. Use the accompanying chart for selecting either wide-tread or radials for your car.

Note: These are comparative relationships and do not imply interchangeability. Be sure your car has proper clearance to accommodate a different tire configuration.

HOW TO BUY

If you are not going to buy a complete set of new tires for your car, plan to at least buy them in pairs. Pairing a brand-new tire with a worn one may adversely affect your car's braking and handling characteristics. Radial and wide-tread tires must always be installed in pairs and, for most satisfactory results, should be installed in complete sets of five. If only two wide-tread or radials are to be used, they must always be installed on the rear wheels.

Finally, check the guarantee and the availability of service for your tires. Most manufacturers offer similar road hazard guarantees which protect you no matter what kind of driving your tires are subject to. All reputable tire guarantees are on a pro rata basis: the defective tire will be repaired at no cost, or a replacement will be furnished and you pay the percentage of the cost equal to the percentage of the tread worn off the defective tire. In most cases, the cost is based on the current adjustment base price. Occasionally, this price is higher than the current retail price, especially if the dealer is having a sale at the time. It's not uncommon to find that you can save money by buying the tire at the sale price rather than having the defective tire replaced at the current pro-rated adjustment price.

If you do much traveling far from home territory, it's wise to look into the service outlet situation. You don't want to be stuck somewhere with a guarantee that is worthless because there is no dealer who can make the adjustment.

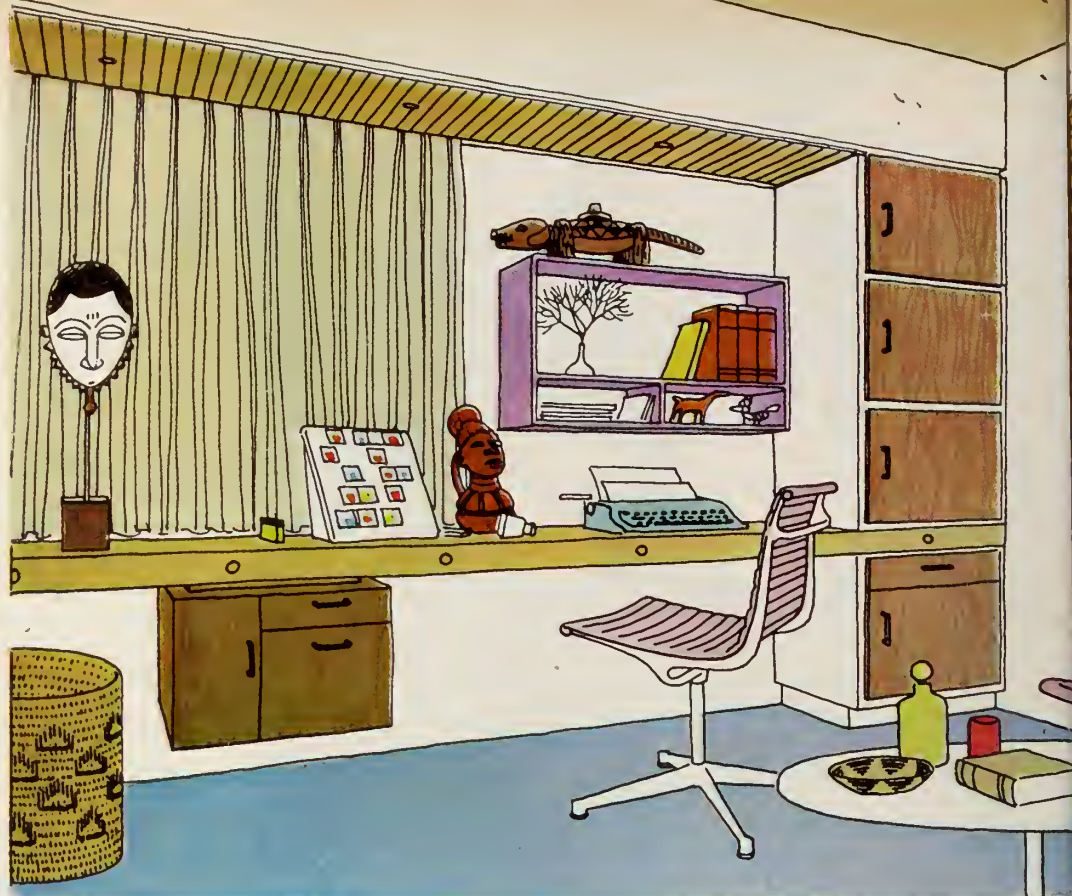

When you are shopping for tires, the most important consideration should be not how little you can get by with spending—but rather, what kind of tire you should have. Considering a tire's importance to both your pocketbook and your safety, you can't afford to compromise.

HOME IMPROVEMENT 1967

SPACEMAKING: HOW TO GET MORE FROM THE HOUSE YOU HAVE

By Noel Seney, Building Editor

Here are six great answers for everyone who has ever said, "This house isn't big enough!" And space is a problem for most people—it's a good bet your house seems smaller today than two years ago. Of course it really isn't; but if you want it to seem larger, and actually live larger, choose one of these solutions.

You can make your house do more—without pushing out any walls. One room can work like two; two can work like three—and you might even use our basement ideas to make your home work like a house twice as big!

The children's suite at right is the first good example. Instead of two small rooms, barely big enough for each child to sleep and study in, this idea merges the two spaces into one. You still have two sleep-study areas, plus a sitting room between.

The storage console in the center handles most clutter, whether the occupants are grade-schoolers or teenagers; and there's room for a small sofa (which can sleep a friend) and a couple of chairs. This way, you never have to retreat because your children have guests. What if one of the two wants privacy? He can just close one accordion door—and his alcove is completely his own.

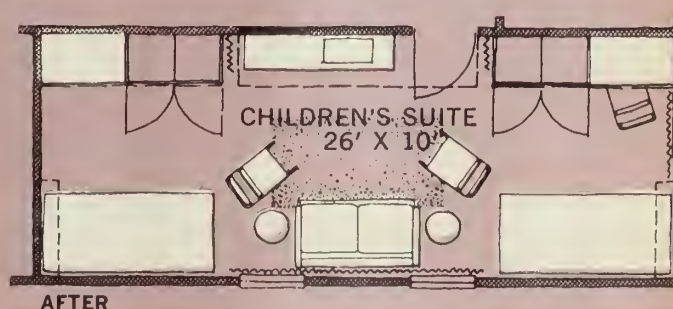

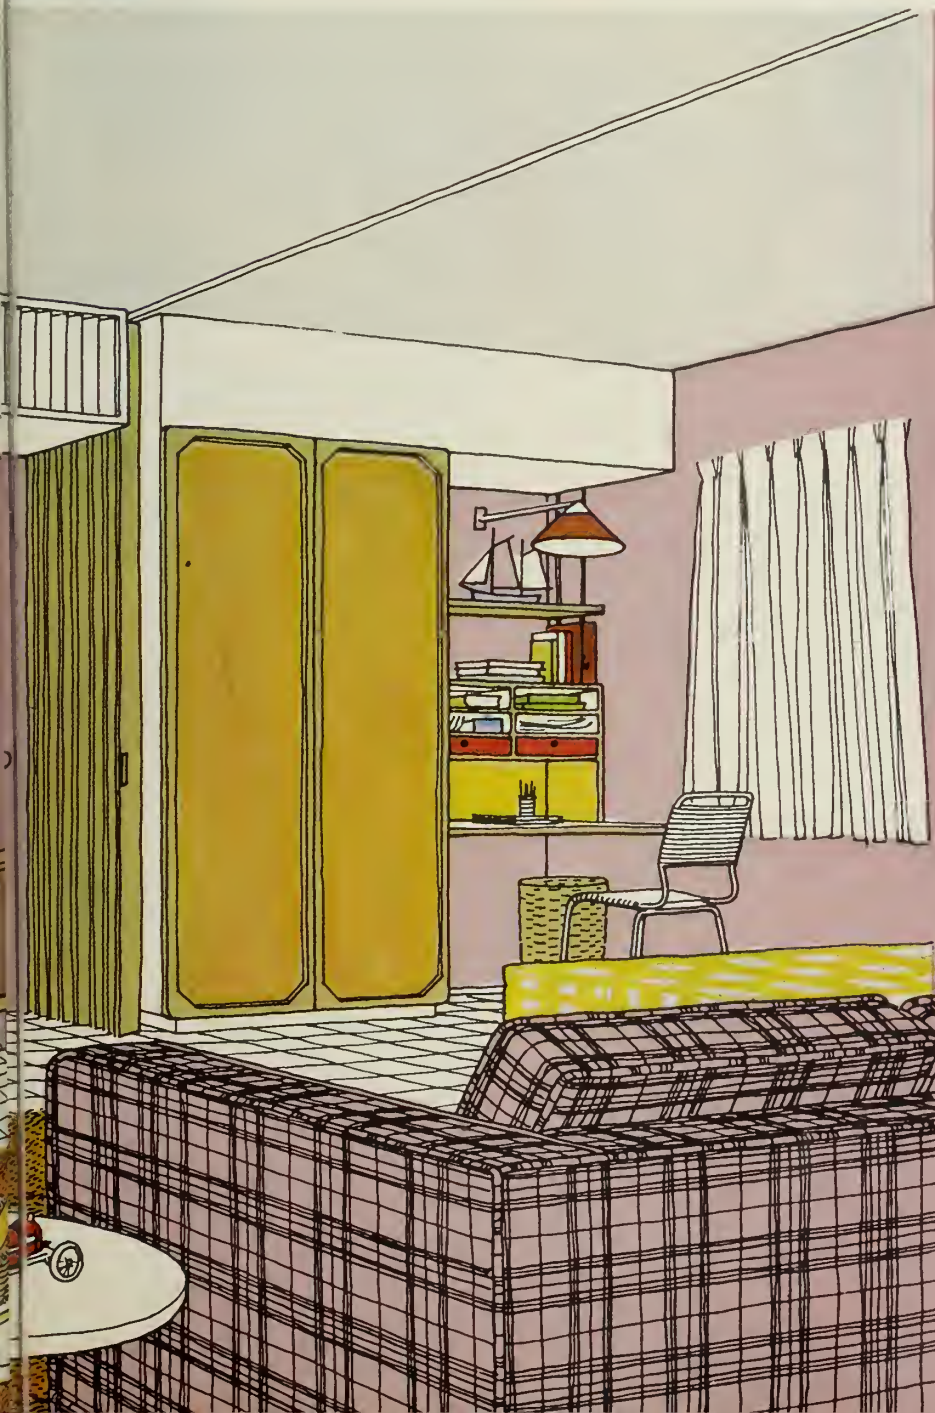

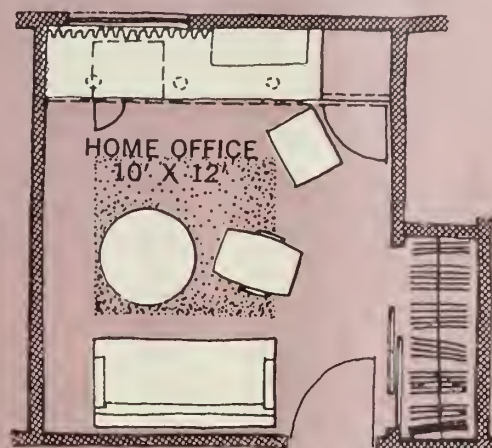

A ROOM FOR GUESTS—BUT AN OFFICE, TOO

If you've been needing a guest room, but also want an office or study, here's the answer. It requires just two things: a switch in furniture and the smart work center on the far wall. The work center is really efficient—the big counter surface can even serve two people.

But the most important feature is the corner storage unit. We've tailored it to include slots for the portable typewriter, a briefcase, a dictating machine. Behind one door, there's even space for a compact home safe. Below the desk is another cabinet, a drawer for pencils and paper, and an easy-to-operate file drawer.

A SWINGING SUITE FOR TWO YOUNGSTERS

These plans show you how to adapt the suite to your house. If you have two rooms back-to-back as shown in the "before," remove the closets and close one door—and you have the basic ingredients for the suite. In the "after" plan, you can see how the new closet-desk units fit and how the accordion doors can close off either private alcove.

RIGHT IN YOUR OWN GARAGE— A PLAYFUL PLAYROOM...

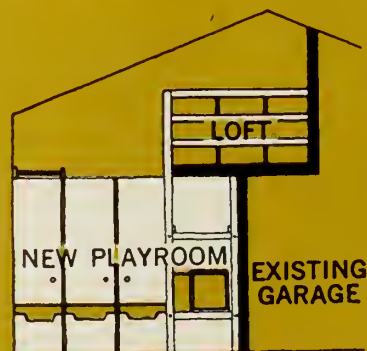

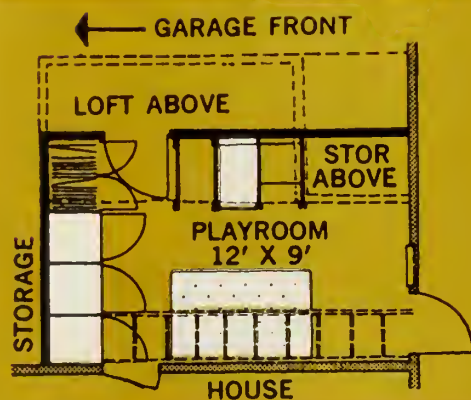

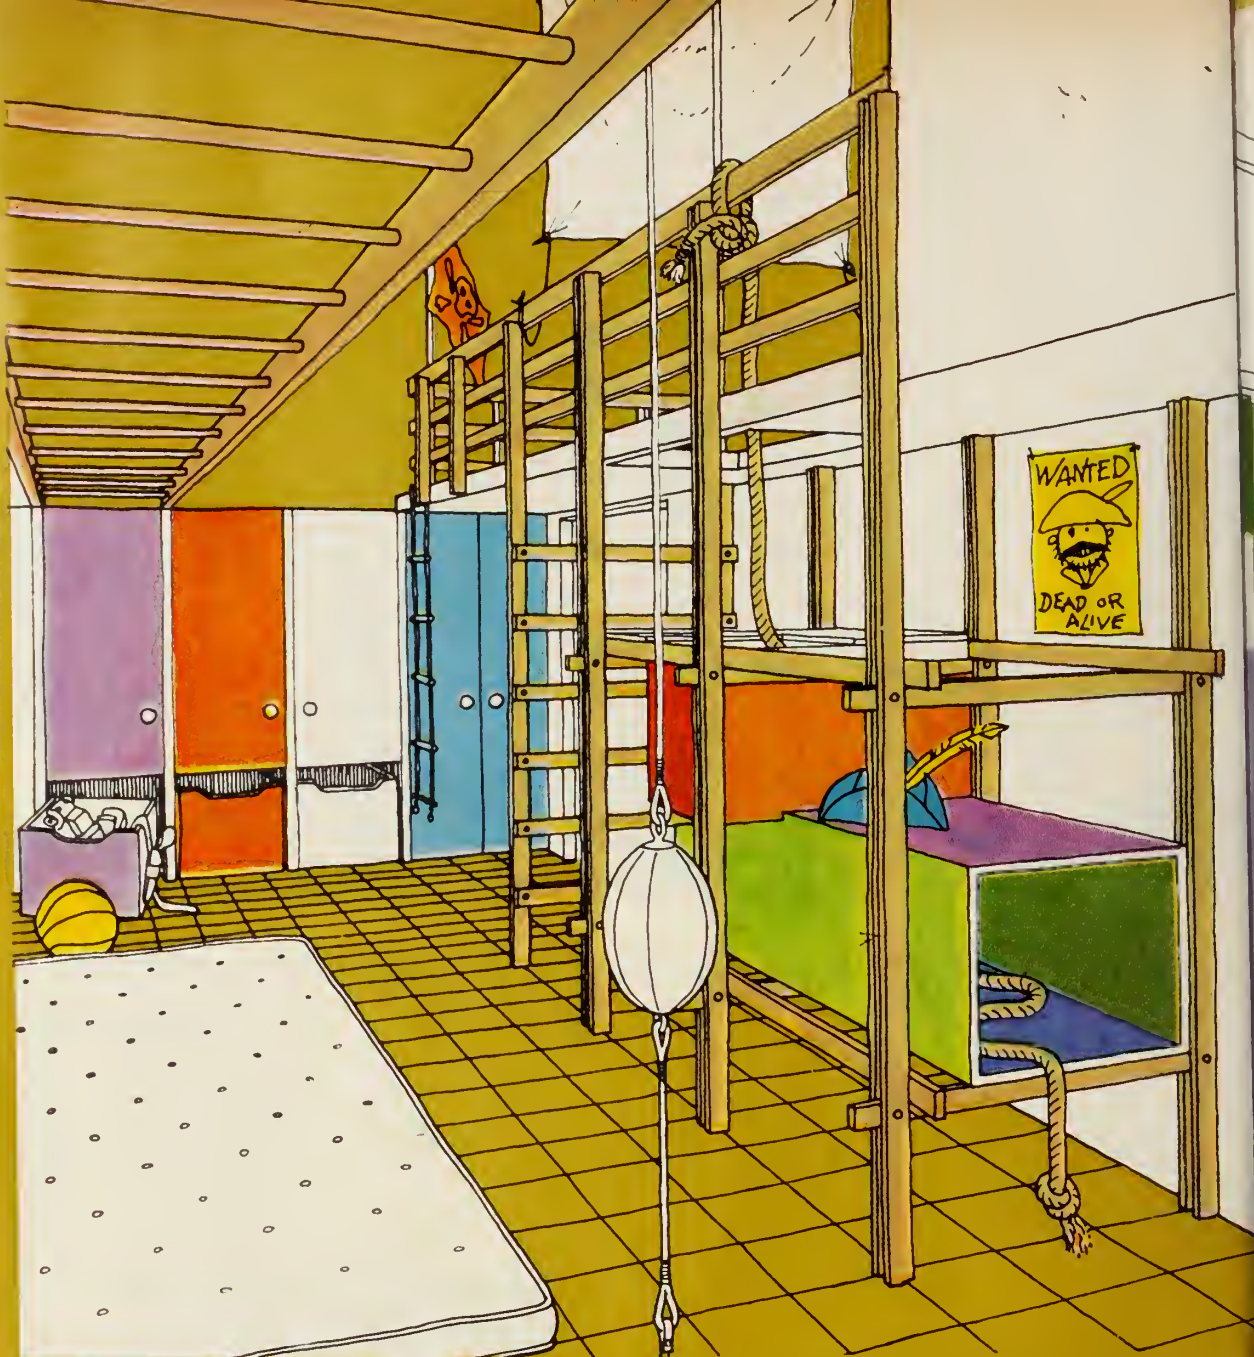

Take less than half of your attached garage and you can build this pressure-release valve: a playroom that will take all the wear and tear (and noise) of indoor play.

There's very little cabinet work, so almost any clever man-of-the-house can do most of the building. Start with the walls; they are ordinary stud construction. Then do the floor as shown in the diagram—it will be as comfortable and easy to clean as any in the house.

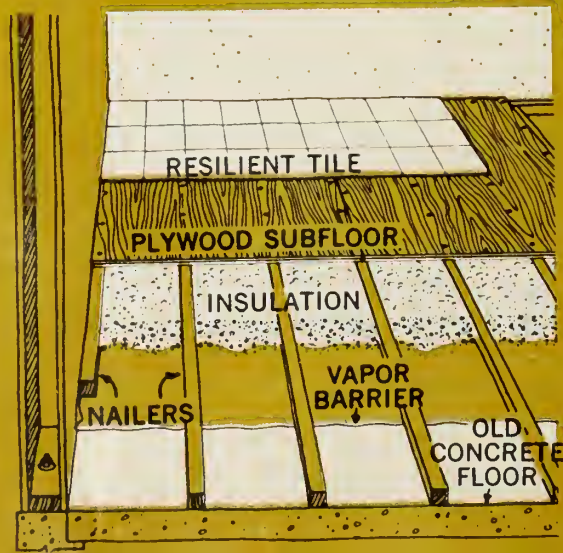

Next comes the climbing unit and the loft. The floor plan shows how we divided the loft for both play and storage. The cross-section drawing shows how one side of the loft is supported by the climbing unit, the other by the ceiling-high wall.

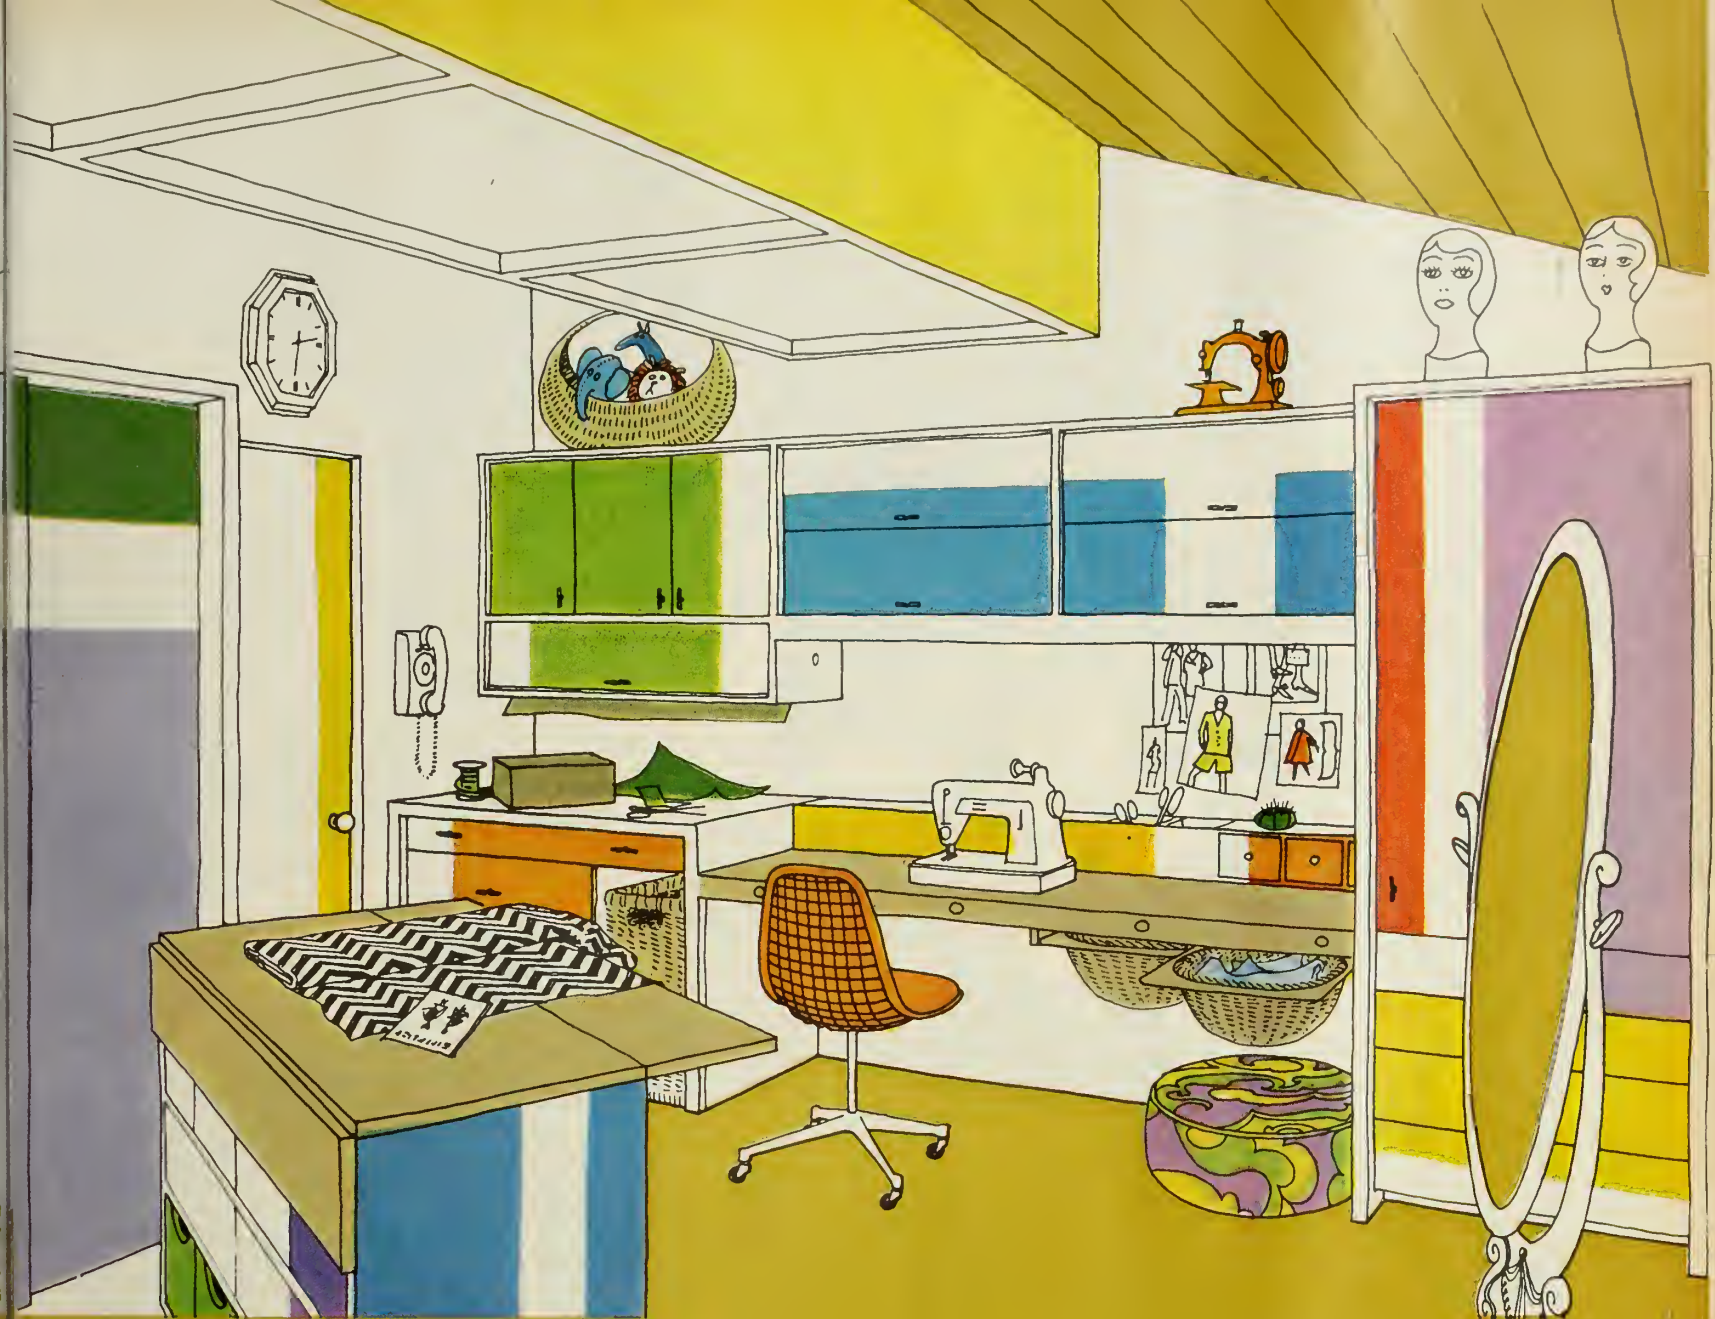

Now you're ready for the finishing touches—the closet, the toy storage, the plywood tunnel, and the ladder above. Add a through-the-wall heater and start enjoying quiet in the rest of your house.

...OR A VERY SERVICEABLE SEWING ROOM

Look to your garage if your space problem begins with a family activity like a sewing center. This room has everything to make sewing a pleasure—but can be adapted to another hobby, too. There is excellent light and work space, plus the kind of storage that can be tailored to create a place for everything.

The work table rolls where you need it and is the right height for stand-up cutting and pinning. Drawers and bins on each side are partly covered by the drop leaves. The storage wall has a closet for hanging, plus drawers and cabinets galore, and swing-out baskets to catch scraps and mending.

The plan shows how neatly a room like this (or the playroom opposite) fits into one quarter of a double garage. Again you need to build only two partitions, which are indicated by the heavy black lines. The garage door remains to provide good access to the front of the garage—so you still have space for bikes, outdoor furniture, and garden equipment there.

This plan shows how we assembled the components of the basement. If you can't duplicate it because of the location of your stairs or utilities, just arrange the six basic parts to fit together another way—and you're headed for a house twice as big.

A BONANZA OF A BASEMENT, JUST FOR THE FINISHING

You could use twice the space you have? Here's how to get it—in the most complete basement finishing project we've ever published. The handsome family area (above, left) welcomes everybody—including guests. We left space for plenty of action at the pool table, and the no-back bench serves both parts of the room. A canvas ceiling tops off the year's most easily picked-up playroom (above); roll-out bins bring the storage to the toys for a change. Behind those double doors at the left is a bulk storage room with just about everything. Out-of-season clothes go into a generous closet. The work shop (middle left) is large enough to handle most any project. The power saw rolls out when you need to cut large pieces of wood. On one wall, an open-and-shut hobby center (left) can serve any member of the family. The counter is desk high and swings up when it's time to quit. This hobby center is so adaptable you could use it almost anywhere in your house—from a family room to a child's bedroom.

FAMILY ROOM SPACE — WHERE THERE WAS NONE BEFORE

Use this divide-and-conquer concept to make space in a typical L-shaped living-dining area pay off in a new way. By building the four-section divider and spotting it as shown in the plan, you create a cozy, parlor-like conversation area (above). So instead of a living room that tries to do too much, you have an adults-only quiet area.

On the other side, the result is a junior edition of a family room (right) that didn't exist before. There's seating space for a whole family of TV watchers—and because this area blends with the dining area, it doesn't seem like a junior edition.

But there is more to the flexible divider units. The narrow end unit moves out of the way so you can roll the bar section to another spot. It is marked "A" in our plan—where you can see how we moved it for entertaining a large group. In its place nearer the dining area, it is more available for serving. And because the barrier between conversation and family areas is shortened, guests can circulate more freely.

The other two large units house a writing desk and music equipment in addition to extra storage.

What's the best way to get the right products for your home improvement?

Answer: shop as carefully as you would for an automobile. After all, your improvement may cost as much as a car—or even more—and you'll probably live with it longer.

First, learn what's available. This may involve a few "just looking, thanks" trips to materials dealers. Visit several showrooms, inspect displays, compare prices and services.

Few stores are big enough to stock really complete lines of paneling, roofing, windows, hardware, plastic laminates, and floor coverings—to name just a few of the products you might use in a major improvement.

So if you don't see what you want—or don't want what you see—ask if there's anything else. It may be the salesman has a brochure describing a new or seldom-called-for item that's just the thing.

Product literature can also help in remembering things you have seen. That beautiful, brick-like vinyl tile may look just great in the showroom, but what will it do for your new family room? The only way to know for sure is to take a sample or photograph of it home and study it at your leisure.

The second step is to decide what you want. After you've narrowed down to a few choices, "try on" your samples. If you're building an addition, and you'd like to use one of the new low-maintenance sidings, compare it to what's already on your house.

When you've made your choices, write down each product's name or model designation, along with the color, size, and quantity you need. And when you place your order, insist on getting exactly what you choose—even if it means waiting several weeks for delivery.

It's natural for a dealer to want to sell from stock, but he'd rather order than lose a sale—so don't settle for second choice. It'll probably cost as much as what you have your heart set on, and you won't be as happy with it.

Where's the best place for a supplementary heating unit?

Locate it almost anywhere you like. You can warm a big addition, converted garage, or basement with equipment so compact it will fit on the top shelf of a closet, or cling to the ceiling like wallpaper.

Crawl space and attics, of course, are best for getting heating units out of the way; closets run a close second. But many new additions don't have crawl space or attics, and few homeowners have closets to spare.

Unless your addition has an extra window, the logical place to install a heating unit is on or in a wall. Wall-mounted units come in all shapes and sizes and can be located almost anywhere—along the baseboard, on the floor, smack dab in the middle of the wall. Wall-mounted gas units with exterior venting provide a safe, fresh source of heat by utilizing outside air for combustion, and they take up very little room—really none at all in the case of the through-wall models. The latter units look and perform like their wall-mounted cousins, but they're contained almost entirely within the wall; anything left over hangs outside.

Many units come with thermostats, blowers, filters, and adjustable louvers, just as in large, central heating plants. With these features, you can control the temperature, distribution, and direction of the heat—and keep it clean, too.

Several wall units offer dual-vent systems. With these units, the exhaust vents either horizontally through the wall, or vertically into a chimney. A few models double as air conditioners during the cooling season.

Electricity makes unobtrusive heat sources possible, too. Radiant floors and ceilings should be installed during construction; the new radiant panels and wallpaper can be added anytime.

Can you have beams with an acoustical ceiling?

Certainly. Lightweight, simulated-wood beams are available as accessories for both tile and suspended types. In most cases, you put them up with the ceiling.

For tile ceilings, there are two choices. One is a pressed-fiber plank with tongue-and-groove edges that interlock with the tiles. It's six inches wide, four feet long, and projects only ¼ inch below the surface of the tiles, making it just right for low basements.

If you have more headroom, or want to add beams to a finished ceiling, buy the thicker box beams made of wood-grained hardboard. These are shipped flat, in twelve-foot lengths. You fold each beam along perforated lines to make a long, three-sided box, then tack or glue to cleats on the ceiling.

If there's a suspended ceiling in your space-stretching plans, you can give it a beam effect, too. One ceiling manufacturer sells metal box beams—prefinished to look like wood—that can be used for lateral or longitudinal channels in the suspension grid system.

You can also buy metal beams that clip onto the conventional channels, or a redwood grid system. In this one, grooved redwood beams replace the metal channels.

How much space to allow for furniture?

Furniture should be part of your home improvement project from the start. If you're adding a new room or stretching an old one, figure out rough dimensions for the big pieces you'll need, and provide for them in the design.

Here's a list of many common sizes. To see how they'll work in your addition or stretched space, cut out pieces of paper to scale and arrange them on a floor plan. Sofa. From 54 to 96 inches long, 31 to 36 inches deep. Convertible sofa. Closed—54 to 90 inches long, 34 to 36 inches deep; open—add from 20 to 48 inches to the depth, depending on which way the bed folds out and whether it's double or queen-size.

Occasional chair. 24x24 inches. Armchair. Up to 40x36 inches.

Dining table and chairs. Up to 3x10 feet. Figure about 18x18 inches for each chair.

Drop-leaf table. Opens out to as much as 60x40 inches; some fold down to just 12 inches wide.

Buffet. 60 to 72 inches long, 18 inches wide.

Beds. Twin—39x80 inches; double—54x80; queen-size—60x80 inches; king-size—78x80 inches.

Storage headboard. Add 8 to 10 inches to the bed's length.

Dressing table. 36 to 60 inches long, 18 to 21 inches wide.

Chests. 18 to 21 inches wide, 30 to 72 inches long.

Nighttable. 16x16 to 24x24 inches.

Can a door stretch space?

Yes, perhaps even more than you think—sometimes a door can even create another room when it is placed just right. Here's a checklist of the types of doors that can save or create space for you.

Sliding doors. Wherever you use one of these, you won't be stealing any floor space at all. Always consider sliding doors that fit into a pocket in the wall when you are making other changes. If you're adding a small bathroom, and see that a person must get completely out of the way to open or close the door on the inside, a sliding pocket door will avoid the inconvenience.

If you have a double-door closet in a bedroom (or, again, are adding one), two sliding doors that bypass each other will let you put furniture much closer.

Accordion doors. Available in both wood and vinyl; you can buy them in almost any size. Choose one that hangs from the ceiling to divide the big, master bedroom so common in many older houses—and you still have the flexibility of opening the door when you want to use the space as one room. Use this same trick to create a home office at one end of a bedroom.

Accordion doors can be used in existing door openings, too. If your house has an old-fashioned two-way swinging door that steals floor space in the kitchen/dining area, you could replace it with this type. When the office isn't in use, just pull the door across it.

Bifold doors. This type does need some clear floor area when it's being opened, but only about half that required by a regular door. With a series of bifold doors, you can create a shallow, wall-wide pantry and still have access to all shelves without causing a complete disruption of the room.

Is there a neat way to put up paneling?

Yes—not only neat but relatively simple. A large share of the credit, both for the neatness and the simplicity of putting up paneling today, must go to the new adhesives. They're tenacious, easy to work with, and come in several sizes of tubes, cans, and cartridges for caulking guns. What's more, the new adhesives put an end to pounding nails and the slow, meticulous work that follows—filling and staining nail holes.

You apply the typical adhesive directly to the studs or wallboard, daubing it on every six or eight inches, or running a continuous bead. Manufacturers' instructions vary, so read them carefully.

Next, you fit the paneling in place, press it against the studs or existing wall for a few seconds, then block the bottom of the paneling out from the wall a few inches to expose the adhesive to the air. This makes the adhesive set up faster, transfers some of it to the paneling for a strong, double bond. The setting-up process usually takes less than ten minutes, but it may take longer.

Use a rubber mallet or a hammer and a well-padded block to set the paneling in place permanently; maximum bonding will be complete in one or two days.

HOW TO TAKE REALLY FINE VACATION PHOTOS

By David Jordan

Electric-eye cameras are great! Every time you push the button, you know you're taking a properly exposed picture. And with the wide-angle lens on most electric-eye snapshot cameras, you also know you'll be in focus with any subject more than a few feet away.

The technical part of picture taking is so automatic these days, you can concentrate on the part where all the fun is—making good photographs of the people and places in your life to help you bring back pleasant memories. Your sweetest moments, of course, come from photos good enough to draw a little gasp of pleasure from your audience. The tips on these pages show you, by example, some simple but effective ways to make those audience-pleasing photographs.

All the pictures here were made with inexpensive electric-eye cameras, to prove to you that fancy equipment doesn't make the difference between good and bad photography. What does count are a few simple rules of thumb and a little thought before pushing the button.

Remember that film cost is small compared to the value of a photograph of a place you might never see again, or the fleeting expression on a child's face. So don't rely on just one shot for one scene. Shoot several pictures from different angles, then save only the best of the lot.

Try some story-telling sequence shots of your vacation trips, too. They help a slide show move right along. A really good series of slides should tell the whole story with little need for comment from the narrator. And keep your camera loaded and ready, whether you're on a trip or not. You never know when a good picture is going to happen—even around home!

Get action into group pictures. How many pictures have you seen like the one on the left? You can almost hear the photographer saying "Okay, now smile," which of course guarantees a frozen-faced and phony grin.

Other all-too-common mistakes are apparent here, too. The photographer was standing too far away from his subjects—and the background is jumbled. But look what happens at right when you shift position to get a cleaner background, move in a little closer, and above all, get the people interested in each other and not the camera. Here the photographer got Mom to talk to the kids, put his camera up to his eye—and waited. Soon the boys settled into relaxed poses, and a good picture resulted.

Not so good

Better

Use foreground objects to add depth. Even an example of classic architecture can look like just another building in a poor photograph. The picture of the mission at left wastes a lot of space on bare lawn and bare sky. There's nothing to give a feeling of depth or relate the building to its surroundings. Yet the good photograph (right) was just a few steps away.

With the cross in the foreground, the photographer identifies the mission for what it is. There's also three-dimensional effect that helps your eye judge the scale of the building. Another bonus: a little of the mountain range now shows, establishing the general locale. As you see, it pays to move around and look for a better view before you shoot!

Not so good

Better

Take advantage of natural locations. Here again the cameraman used both his head and his feet to get an outstanding picture. The "wrong" photo isn't bad, but it's just any old church. There's no foreground, and the only point of interest in the picture is the actual structure of the church steeple.

A short walk around the pond reveals a whole new scene: the reflection of the church fills the foreground, framed by trees. The result is a complete picture with excellent composition—not just an "I was there" shot of a steeple. The other lesson here is never to consider a subject captured on film when you've snapped one picture. Keep your eyes open as you stroll, and be ready to shoot a better scene when you find it.

Look for the elements of composition.

This sounds like a highly professional rule for an amateur with a simple camera, but there's really nothing to it. Take the two examples here. From up on the bridge, the view of the little sailboats and the water was lovely. But just a quick snapshot of the area resulted in a meaningless jumble of sails, a mud puddle, and a couple of people cut off at the waist.

Then the photographer thought a bit more, yelled something like "Hey, George, stand down there by the bow of your boat," and—click—he had a strong photo with the lines of the boat masts leading right to the central figure in his bright sailing gear. Composition often is as easy as that. Often, it takes just a moment to see it.

Don't make people look at the sun.

If you do, you'll always get the "sun squint" look the girl has in the photo at left. One of the old rules of snapshot photography was to shoot with the sun at your back; this usually made your subject face right into the sun. The reason for the rule, despite the likelihood of sun squint, is that with the sun at your back, the subject is lighted in an even, flattering manner that eliminates heavy shadows.

That's fine, but with just a little ingenuity, you can do away with the sun squint, too. In this case, it was just a matter of moving the girl, chair and all, back about a foot until the shadow of a lacy tree branch fell lightly across her face. Presto, no squint!

Shoot action going or coming. Most simple cameras have a fairly slow shutter speed to allow for small diaphragm openings. This is the best compromise for most snapshots, but it can blur fast-moving subjects.

Get around this limitation by taking a camera position where the subject will be moving either almost directly toward or away from you. Don't try to "stop" a subject moving at right angles to your field of vision. When you can't arrange an ideal situation, try "panning"—moving the camera with your subject as it crosses your line of sight. Push the button while the camera is moving, and follow through smoothly. The background will be a little blurred, but the subject will be sharp as a tack.

Not so good

Better

Try a series of poses for portraits. Those birthday pictures of kids are going to mean a lot in years to come, so don't get stingy with film or lazy about trying different poses. The head-on static view at left doesn't say much about an active boy except what he looks like when he's bored.

Instead, with a little encouragement, the boy started moving around and talking, losing his self-consciousness. Out of the series of four or five shots made during this time came the natural-looking portrait at right. Getting a good picture of a child can be nearly impossible unless you spend more time talking and kidding than you spend taking pictures. Or, even better, try to catch him when he is completely unaware of the camera.

Keep backgrounds as plain as you can. Your eye doesn't see like a camera. It focuses on the thing you're looking at, and ignores the rest. A camera lens "sees" everything, and faithfully records it. Unfortunately it will faithfully record a confusing background right along with the subject. Hence your disappointment when the great picture you saw in the viewfinder turns out to be a mess of conflicting shapes and colors.

So keep reminding yourself to check the background before you shoot. Here, just by standing up instead of sitting, the photographer was able to silhouette this handsome young couple against the water in the pool, instead of losing the girl's face in the jumble on the other side.

Not so good

Better

When in doubt, move in closer. Another way your eye fools you (but not the camera) is to make people seem closer than they really are. Your eye focuses on the important part of the picture—the person—and tends to ignore all the leftover space in the background. The problem is aggravated by the wide-angle lens on most simple cameras, which makes subjects appear farther away than does your naked eye. Often the result is a tiny, barely identifiable figure like the girl in the photo at left.

The only cure is to get closer. When you're checking to make sure you have a "clean" background, be positive you don't have too much of it. Fill up that frame with the most important part of the picture!

Get people into your scenics. The wide-angle lens on your camera really comes into its own when you shoot scenery. You can get breathtaking panoramas because of the wider field of the lens. However, you'll make those beautiful scenics a lot more meaningful if you include some human figures. People provide a natural center of interest, even when they're just tiny figures. They help make the scenery even more impressive by creating a visual scale.

On top of the artistic considerations, you get a kick seeing members of your family in glamorous surroundings. But remember that in primarily scenic photos, people should be far enough away from the camera, placed so they don't dominate the scenery.

Check all angles before you shoot. Besides getting your subject to move into different poses, you need to keep moving yourself. The photo at left was the most obvious view, with the photographer directly in front of his subjects. But the harsh side light from the sun and the static pose didn't do them justice.

By moving around almost in back of the two lovely ladies, the photographer caused them to assume a more graceful pose. Changing his own position also changed the illumination from side light to a more dramatic and softer back light. You can't push the sun around for the lighting you want, but you can move yourself, which has the same effect. Those few feet can make all the difference!

SUMMERTIME EATING

GREAT FROM THE GRILL

By Rita Holmberg, Foods Editor

When the occasion calls for something really special, that's the time to put one of these barbecues on the grill. Each is a first-class invitation to great eating. (And a wonderful way to secure your standing as Outdoor Chef of the Neighborhood.) Sauce Provençale does for our sizzling sirloin just what a successful sauce should: it complements the flavor of the meat but does not overpower it. Not that it's bland, mind you! Garlic, shallots, and fresh tomatoes combine with butter or margarine and sherry to give the sauce real character.

Lemon-Barbecued Chuck Steak will let you balance the budget without anyone's even guessing. You marinate the steak, cut 1½ inches thick, in a well-seasoned lemon juice and oil mixture before broiling it to juicy tenderness. Also budget-minded are the Barbecued Chicken Wings. A breeze to fix, either for appetizers or the main course, because you use a bottled barbecue sauce. (They're finger food, of course, either way, so be sure to provide a good supply of paper napkins!)

COOL, COOL SALADS

... to fix and to eat. You can make our sparkling Tuna-filled Iceberg Ring in the cool, cool of morning and forget about it till serving time. You'll like the crispness of the iceberg lettuce and sliced green onion in the lime-flavored mold, and the tuna salad with its mayonnaise-lemon-caper dressing.

What better flavor partners than juicy fresh pears and blue cheese! Especially when you serve them in pretty, individual salads like these: the pear halves nested in lettuce cups and topped with mandarin orange sections, and a blender-made Blue Cheese Dressing ready for spooning on. Why not serve them for lunch soon, with thin-sliced corned beef shaped into little rolls and speared with dill pickle chunks? Hot rolls or crusty bread and coffee would be ideal. For dessert, play it cool with tall, slim parfaits.

Recipes on pages 80 and 97

Of course, summer just wouldn't be summer without potato salad—but that doesn't mean you have to fix it the same old way. To make your family and friends sit up and take notice, try our Peppy Potato Salad. You "rev up" the classic potato-celery-egg combination with mustard seed and dill seed soaked in vinegar to heighten their flavor. Then you toss the mixture with an old-fashioned corned or "boiled" salad dressing, egg-yolk-yellow and dry-mustard-zippy. No ordinary potato salad, this!

SUMMER SANDWICHES

Here's a version of the popular Poor Boy Sandwich that's so successful, we call it a "Rich Boy." It even looks affluent, with bologna, chopped ham, salami, and golden cheese tucked into those crusty French rolls. You first spread the split rolls with mustard-butter, add the meat and cheese, and wrap them in foil. Then heat, in the oven or on the grill, until they're hot through and unbelievably scrumptious. The mild garlic of the salami blends with the smoky ham, mustard, and nippy cheese to make these Rich Boys extravagant in flavor.

Another of your old favorites, the BLT sandwich, gets a different twist in this Avocado Bacon Open-facer. The bacon, lettuce, and tomato are still there, but also, slices of creamy-smooth avocado and a generous topping of Thousand Island Dressing. A knife-and-fork sandwich, of course, and especially appetizing when you garnish it with carrot-stuffed ripe olives and sweet pickle fans. A tall glass of iced tea is a just-right beverage to go with. And for dessert, why not serve juicy blueberries topped with golden custard?

Want to hear the "inside story" on these burgers? They're made with packaged herb-seasoned stuffing mix. Light, tender, and juicy, the Stuffedburgers are real flavor standouts. You can count on four or five patties to a pound of ground beef done this way. Because the stuffing "stretches" the meat a bit. Broil them to a rich, savory brown, and then serve piping hot on toasted hamburger buns. Top with cherry tomatoes and onion rings, and pass celery and carrot sticks —along with catsup, of course.

IDEA VEGETABLES

... that's what they are, these fresh-from-the-garden beauties that can help you turn summer meals into something extra-special! Plump red tomatoes fairly bursting with flavor; rich deep-green zucchini with their contrasting pale, tender centers; snappy green beans challenging you to cook them "short and quick" to keep them at their best; sweet, buttery corn with golden goodness in every kernel. With variety like this, how can a summertime meal ever be dull? And when you think of the bonus vegetables offer in vitamins and minerals, their low-calorie features, their ease of preparation—well, you just can't afford to pass them by!

Spinach-stuffed Zucchini rates special raves. You'll like the combination of zucchini, fresh (or frozen) spinach, cheddar cheese, and crumbled crisp bacon. You partially cook the zucchini first, then stuff and bake. One of our favorite vegetables gets a new twist in Green Beans Far East. Set a timer so you'll cook the beans just tender-crisp. Then team with sliced water chestnuts, add a sour cream sauce, and top with pimiento. Swiss Corn Bake is an idea for you to use now with fresh sweet corn, and later with frozen or canned. The Swiss accent? From shredded process Swiss cheese.

PLUM-LOVELY DESSERTS

Translate summer's wealth of fresh red plums—plump, sweet-tart, and juicy—into these memorable desserts. Leading off—our Crumb-top Plum Pie. For an intriguing taste contrast to the zesty nutmeg and cinnamon in the topping, spoon softened vanilla ice cream over the warm pie as you serve it.

Buying Guide, page 99

Pink and pretty and as light as a soft summer breeze, this Plum Whip! You'll love it to wind up a big meal, or to impress the crowd at your next luncheon. You'll also love the fact that it's a simple five-ingredient recipe (plums, egg whites, salt, sugar, and lemon juice) that you can fix in advance, spoon into the sherbets and chill. Then, at serving time, simply top each one with fluffy whipped cream. As a beverage, how about coffee, demitasse-strength, a perfect foil for the sweetness of the delicate Plum Whip?

Our Plum Dessert Mold with Lemon Sauce is another "plum-lovely." It's slanted to summer meals, but so delicious that you'll want to make it all year 'round, substituting well-drained canned plums for the fresh. You use lemon and orange juice in the gelatin mixture, and whip it before you fold in the diced plums, to give it an interesting, airy texture. When you unmold the dessert, wreath the top with sweet flaked coconut. Pass the velvety sauce—an easy no-cook one, by the way, with the zesty tang of lemon.

Dare anyone to match the flavor of fresh, blushing nectarines at their peak of ripeness! That flavor carries through in our Fresh Nectarine Sherbet, and is even accented with a little lemon juice you add to the pureed fruit in preparing the sherbet. It's a perfect ending to a summer meal, or refreshing any time of day. Show off its delicate peach color by serving it in crystal-clear sherbets, and garnish with perky sprigs of mint. Pass crisp cookies, made "from scratch," or one of the packaged refrigerated doughs.

Here's one of the easiest ways ever to win smiles at breakfast—or compliments at your next coffee or brunch. You make this Nectarine Quick Cake from packaged biscuit mix and come up with a light, feathery coffee cake that's a cross between dessert and bread. Serve it warm, so you can sniff that wonderful fragrance of the baked-on sugar and cinnamon topping. Spoon a dollop of sour cream over each serving, and treat it as dessert. Or, offer regular or whipped butter or margarine, and call it a very special bread.

NECTARINES THREE WAYS

You may think you've run the gamut on pizza, but don't be too sure till you've tasted this Nectarine Dessert Pizza. A pretty spectacular dessert to spring on the family or guests as the finale to a summer meal. And it has that fine feature of being a make-ahead that chills serenely in the refrigerator till serving time and even improves in flavor while it waits.

The crust will remind you of kuchen, slightly sweet and buttery. And you make that rosy glaze over the fruit from currant jelly, orange juice, and a bit of mace. You fill the crust with golden nectarine slices, arranging them in circles, starting at the outer rim, and then spoon on the glaze. Refrigerate it; then at serving time, garnish with whipped cream rosettes.

Sirloin with Sauce Provençale

Spoon this elegant sauce on roast prime rib of beef, too—

- 4 medium tomatoes, peeled, cut in 6 wedges each, and seeded
- $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon sugar
- 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- $\frac{1}{4}$ cup chopped shallots or green onion
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup dry sherry
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup butter or margarine

Heat, stirring gently, just till butter melts. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Serve over charcoal broiled sirloin steak: broil steak over hot coals 10 to 12 minutes on each side for rare, or 15 to 17 minutes on each side for medium. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Lemon Barbecued Chuck Steak

Marinade is brushed on as the meat broils for extra flavor—over hot coals about 12 minutes on each side for rare, or 15 minutes on each side for medium, brushing occasionally with marinade. Carve meat across grain in thin slices. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Barbecued Chicken Wings

To place chicken wings on barbecue spit, push point of spit through the meat between the two bones in middle section of each wing. Tuck wing tips under large end section of each wing. Attach spit rod to rotisserie; broil over medium coals 50 to 60 minutes, brushing frequently with bottled barbecue sauce the last 15 minutes.

Pimiento strips

Soften gelatin in beef broth; stir over low heat until dissolved. Stir in water, salt and lemon juice. Gradually add gelatin to Miracle Whip, mixing until well blended. Chill until slightly thickened; fold in spinach, onion, eggs and bacon. Pour into 1 1/2 quart mold; chill until firm. Unmold; garnish with pimiento strips. 8 servings. The teasing taste and delicate texture that make this salad so delightful depend on pure Knox Gelatine and America's favorite salad dressing. Whatever you do with Miracle Whip, the delicate flavor shines through!

Spinach-stuffed Zucchini

3 zucchini (about 1 pound)

- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup milk
- $\frac{1}{3}$ cup shredded natural cheddar cheese
- 4 slices bacon, crisp-cooked, drained, and crumbled

Trim off ends of zucchini; cook, whole, in boiling water 10 to 12 minutes. Drain thoroughly. Halve lengthwise and scoop out centers; chop centers. Add chopped zucchini to spinach. In saucepan, blend flour and milk; add spinach mixture. Cook and stir till thickened. Place zucchini halves in shallow baking dish; sprinkle cavities with salt. Spoon spinach mixture into zucchini shells. Top with cheese and bacon. Bake in moderate oven (350°) for 15 to 20 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

- 1 beaten egg
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
- $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
- Dash pepper

So we'll just keep on making our foil strong and tear-resistant. Otherwise, it wouldn't be good enough for you...or for us. Reynolds Wrap.

SWEET & SAUCY SPARERIBS

- | | |
|-----------------------|--------------------------------|
| 3 lbs. lean spareribs | 1 clove garlic, crushed (opt.) |
| | 1/2 teaspoon dry mustard |
| Morinade: | 1/4 teaspoon cloves |
| 1/4 cup soy sauce | 1/4 to 1/2 tsp. Tobasco Sauce |
| 1/3 cup corn syrup | 1/4 teaspoon salt |
| 1/3 cup lemon juice | Heavy Duty Reynolds Wrap |

Combine morinade ingredients and pour over spareribs. Cover and refrigerate overnight. Next day, line grill with Heavy Duty Reynolds Wrap and build fire right on the foil. Remove ribs from morinade and grill 5 to 10 minutes on each side or until browned. Place ribs on a length of Heavy Duty Reynolds Wrap and spoon morinade over them, bringing up the foil to hold liquids. Now close the foil, double-folding edges. Place "package" on grill and bake about 45 minutes or until done. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

FACE-LIFT FOR FOLDING CHAIRS

Ordinary wooden folding chairs may seem unlikely candidates for a glamour buildup. But start to experiment and you'll be amazed how handsome they can be. And all you need to achieve the transformation is a little daring plus paint, fabric, and trimming. Here we show exactly how to turn those functional folding chairs into fashionable seating.

Photographs: Alderman Studios, Inc.

Begin the rejuvenating process with a coat of satin finish enamel. Black is the most sophisticated choice, but bold, bright colors can be quite striking. Stud the chair frame on both sides with brass upholstery tacks. Then match this shiny look with length of brass chain fastened to the chair back and seat.

To make a chair seat as comfortable as it is elegant, cushion it with a urethane foam pad covered with printed velvet or corduroy. Add the final touch of cotton fringe, and your folding chair is ready to begin life anew!

AUGUST GARDENING WHERE YOU LIVE!

Norvell Gillespie, Better Homes and Gardens Western Field Editor

Overgrown daylilies. Daylilies spread almost as fast as crabgrass when given congenial surroundings. That's why, every three or four years, they ought to be divided at this time of the year. The new clumps have time to get established for good flowering the next season.

Lift daylily clump with spading fork and wash roots free of soil so you can see where best to make the cuts.

Use a sharp knife to cut out sections containing at least three or four leafy crowns. Replant divisions at same depth the original plant was growing. Water to settle soil around roots.

There are few plants that can take more abuse than this marvelous perennial. With the exception of snails, which dearly love the foliage, they are pretty close to 100 percent pest-free.

Throughout the West, I've found them growing in all sorts of soils—from the harsh red gravel of the old Sierra gold mining country, to the rich, woody compost enjoyed in the Pacific Northwest. In Golden Gate Park, they are actually used as bog plants at the edges of ponds where their bulbous root systems take advantage of the constant moisture.

In recent years, hybridists have developed excellent red-flowered varieties. They need heat in order to develop the best colors. While it is true that these perennials withstand conditions of sun or part shade, it is in the hot areas where the flowers fade when exposed to full sun the entire day—especially the red-flowered ones. Better give them a spot in the afternoon shade.

You can fill your garden with iris. For most people, the iris is one of the garden stalwarts. They bloom magnificently on cue, and their colors rival their shapes for attention. It's the bearded iris, of course, that give such easy and wonderful results. They are at their peak in May in the warm areas of the West, June in the colder parts.

There are many kinds of iris—more than 150. Literally every spot on the globe has a few natives, ranging from Siberia to Japan, to Western Europe, and the United States. The Pacific Coast is the home of three important natives.

Most iris are propagated from rhizome divisions. It is important to divide bearded iris when they become crowded, or the quality of the blossoms will suffer. Here's how to divide and replant your bearded iris.

Lift clump of iris with spading fork and cut off sections of new growth leaving rhizomes of maximum length. Discard tough old rhizomes in center of clump. Cut leaves back one-half to a fan shape. Dust cut surface and entire rhizome with gypsum. Use a cupful of powdered gypsum to work into soil for each grouping.

Plant five fans in an 18-inch-diameter circle. Set so the cut end of rhizome is pointed toward center of the circle. Place rhizome on a mound of soil in bottom of shallow hole and spread roots down sides. Cover with soil and firm. Rhizome should be barely covered with soil.

It is generally a good idea to establish the plants as early as possible. The reason: buds for the next year's flowers form in the rhizomes (or tops) this summer. In hot desert areas, however, there is an advantage in delaying planting until the worst of the heat is over. The soil should be well drained and slightly on the alkaline side. If the soil doesn't drain well, prepare a raised planting bed, about six inches above the surrounding ground level.

In very hot locations, cover the rhizomes with about an inch of soil. In cool areas the roots can be left exposed above the soil surface, so the bulbous part rides a little high, "like a duck on the water," half in and half out.

Good blooms can be expected next spring, but they will improve during the second and third years. At the end of the fourth season, it would be a good idea to divide and replant the crowded clumps.

Geraniums. To extend the season of bloom, remove faded flower clusters. And, contrary to old wives' tales, geraniums will appreciate shots of plant food at three- to four-week intervals. The secret is to use one with a low-nitrogen content. Then the plants won't go to lush leaf growth.

Cuttings four inches long can be taken now. They will root easily from branches selected anywhere on the plant. The cuttings will develop into husky young plants that can be grown in containers and enjoyed at Christmas time for cheerful color. In the Northwest, these container plants will have to be handled indoors. But in California and the Southwest, they can be enjoyed outside. No matter where they are placed, make sure they get lots of sun. When planted against buildings or among shrubs, they prefer a south or a west exposure.

For potted plants, use a soil mix consisting of two parts of soil, one part coarse sand, and one part leaf mold, fir bark, or similar humus.

Geraniums bloom more heavily when the root systems are constricted. Never use too large a pot, and preferably only one rooted cutting per container. Metal cans work well as containers, for clay pots do rob moisture from root tips. But don't keep them too moist! It's a good idea to let them dry out almost to the wilting point and then follow up with a thorough watering. Geraniums appreciate overhead sprinkling of water on the foliage. Once the flower buds begin to form, make sure the supply of moisture is even and regular.

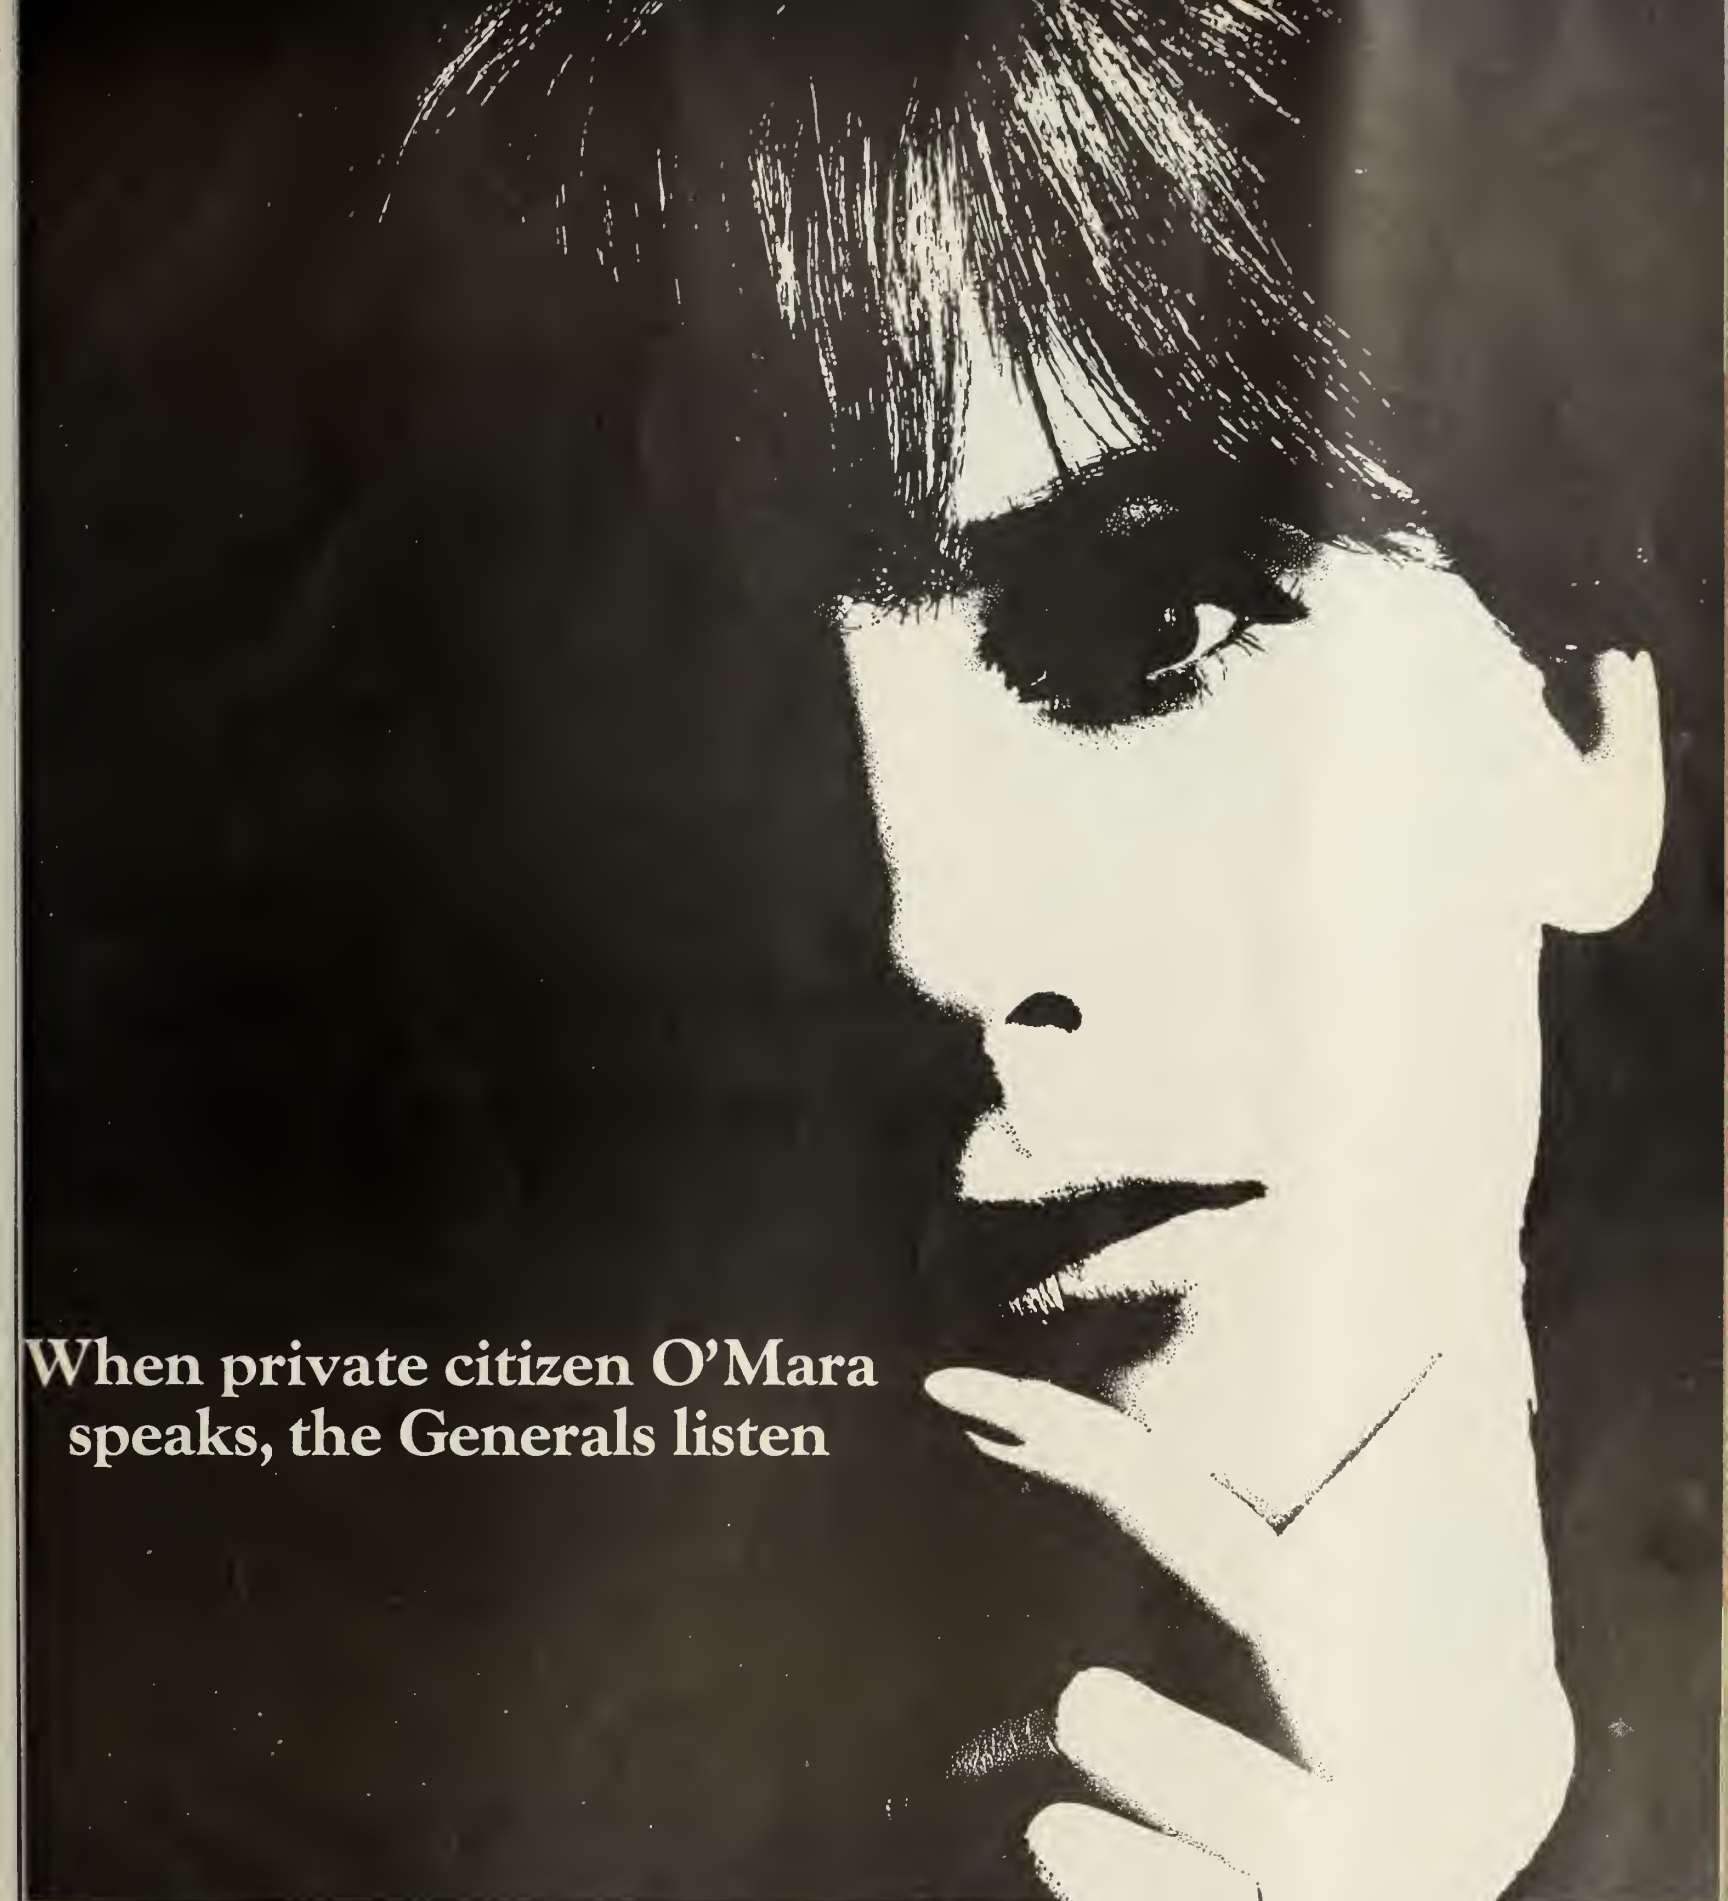

Some people consider geraniums old-fashioned. And, it's true. They have a history dating clear back to 1690 when they were first discovered in Africa. But, their ever-increasing beauty, size, and range of color have continued to keep them popular.

Keep your garden green. Maintaining the moisture content of the soil rates tops in priority this month. Some plants, such as fuchsias, tuberous begonias, azaleas, and ferns, will require almost daily attention, especially if plants are in containers.

Lawns stay rich, deep green much longer when given thorough and deep waterings every week or so, rather than infrequent, light sprinklings. If your property has any fast-growing trees like acacia, willow, or pepper, obviously you will have to supply additional moisture. The roots of these trees can absorb the moisture from a flower bed in just a few hours, unless enough water is provided for both the trees and the plants. Eucalyptus are even greedier. Sometimes it pays to grow plants in redwood containers set on a graveled or paved area under the trees. This saves fighting the problem of supplying adequate moisture.

Watering during the early evening hours is best way to get water into soil without undue loss through evaporation. Water pressure is ideal at this time, so sprinklers operate efficiently.

Water mildew-prone plants—roses, tuberous begonias—in the morning.

When private citizen O'Mara speaks, the Generals listen

General Foods, General Motors, General Mills better pay attention to the likes of Mrs. O'Mara. Because she—and you—buy only the brands you like. And drop the ones you don't.

That's the wonderful power you have when you have free choice. It's free choice that keeps the Generals on their toes trying to please the troops. And in competing with each other, they generally come up with something better. Or cheaper. Or else.

Yet, strangely enough, there are well-meaning people in this country today who just don't see it that way. They think Mrs. O'Mara is confused by too much choice in the marketplace. Or, maybe, just not bright enough to choose among all those different cake mixes or 36 different kinds of cars. Reduce the choice, they say. Wouldn't four kinds of cake mix be enough? Standardize the products. That will make shopping a lot quicker and easier for everybody.

The trouble is, who sets the standards? Not

Mrs. O'Mara. She may be a wizard with a bowl of batter but she hasn't a test tube to her name. So, the critics suggest, let the government do her shopping for her.

That's sympathetic of them but Mrs. O'Mara's very favorite cake is a plum-nut mix—and that's apt to be the first to go when they start cutting back on choice. We hope yours is chocolate or vanilla because they stand a pretty good chance of surviving.

PINPOINT DECORATING

Every home has them—those small areas that defy you to make them distinctive. Pick up the challenge like this. To stretch space, use a wall-hung unit, a cantilevered shelf, or pieces that stack or slide neatly out of the way. Then add the zip of your favorite art or prized collectibles, and that small space will start to scintillate.

Photograph: Hedrich-Blessing. Interior Decorator: J. Neil Stevens, N.S.I.D.

An interesting miscellany can add a world of appeal to a blank wall. Here a many-drawered Mexican chest, a pair of African spears, and a period portrait bring character to a small hallway. The split wooden column between two doorways in the foreground is another attention-getter.

SEWING CENTERS THAT FIT WHERE YOU NEED THEM

Photograph: Bill Hedrich, Hedrich-Blessing. Design: George Winnacker. Data: Barbara East Cathcart

What's the best location for a sewing center? Answer: Wherever is handiest for you. Build one in a family room, laundry, utility area, even a bedroom.

You'll need excellent lighting, room to spread out, and convenient storage—so you can quickly clear the clutter out of sight. Here's a trio of sewing centers that will fit almost anywhere in your house.

1. This sliding-door closet was tailored to accommodate a standard cabinet-type sewing machine. When the head is dropped into the cabinet and the leaf folded up, the unit doubles as a desk-planning center—and there's space left over for an intercom and portable TV set.

The built-in drawers at left hold foldable fabrics; partially completed clothes can be hung in the closet at far right; the movable canvas hamper holds mending. A fluorescent fixture under the bottom shelf lights the work surface.

2. At first glance, this bedroom built-in looks like a desk—which is what it is when the doors are shut. Open them, slide out the portable machine, and you have an efficient sewing center.

The unit's storage divides itself naturally. Drawers and a cabinet for sewing needs are on the left, shelves and drawers for office supplies on the right. And, of course, hanging items can be kept in the bedroom closet.

3. This sewing center—built into a family room storage wall—also functions as a gift wrapping center. A pair of bifold doors closes it off.

Lockable casters and a long cord on the machine make the table mobile, so it can handle large pieces of fabric. When the sewing center is closed, there's just enough extra room inside to accommodate the swivel chair.

Those drawers at left hold patterns and fabrics. The lamp above them swivels so light can be directed on the table when it's pulled out; behind the lamp are hooks for work in progress.

A small chest on the wall above the work table keeps fasteners, tapes, and buttons handy. There's a big pull-out panel at right for spools, thread, needles, pins, and chalk.

Dainty it ain't

Unless you happen to be a rhinoceros, don't ever, ever bathe with Lava. It just ain't dainty. Or delicate. Beauty soaps are.

But Lava is rough. Because it's got volcanic pumice in it. And that pumice makes Lava the best soap in the world for getting dirty hands clean. Right down to the fingernails. Lava digs out dirty-hands dirt like no beauty soap ever could.

Come to think of it, maybe Lava is dainty. Like a Sherman tank.

World's worst beauty soap.
WORLD'S BEST HAND SOAP.

SMART COOK

HOW TO SAVE TIME IN YOUR KITCHEN

To help you short-cut those inevitable kitchen duties, here's a roundup of common sense tips. Read them over—then use them on for size—and see they don't make shorter work of organizing and preparing meals, and of cleanup too.

Organization:

- Group all like cans and packages on kitchen pantry shelves. This speeds selection when you are preparing meals, and you can see at a glance what's needed from the market.
- Arrange herbs and spices alphabetically.
- Plan kitchen storage areas. Utensils will be at the place of first use.
- Organize refrigerator so there is a special space for leftovers. Then you can easily see what on hand and what needs to be used promptly—thus cutting food waste.
- Make a menu plan each week to eliminate the quandary of what to serve.
- For each meal, outline preparation time schedule—so the food will be ready at once.

Preparation:

- Before starting, thoroughly read each recipe to see which step—such as baking a pie crust—should be done first.
- Gather all utensils and food needed before beginning the recipe.
- If your measuring spoon or cup serves a dual purpose, use it to measure dry, then liquid ingredients. This eliminates washing after first use.
- If recipe requires beating both egg whites and yolks, beat the whites first, then the yolks—no washing of beaters. If this isn't practical, rinse the beaters with cold water before washing. Hot water causes egg particles to stick to the beaters.
- Does the recipe call for mixing first, then heating? If possible, mix in the saucepan to save dishes and cleaning up.
- Turn on your oven before starting recipe preparation, so oven will reach the correct temperature when food is ready to go in.
- If you have metal cabinets, netic clips to hold recipe level on the door. makes it easy to follow and keeps food spills recipe!

We've heard it... maybe you've thought so too... Why does Wayside charge $1.00 for its catalog when most other nurseries give theirs away gratis? Well... if our catalog cost only a few cents each... we too, would be delighted to distribute ours without charge.

BUT... Our customers are gardeners who want something different. They want to be able to pick and choose their favorites from a vast selection of thoroughly tested subjects in an infinite variety of unusual types of plant material.

So... our catalog just has to be big! Actually, this 144-page book contains as many pages as the two leading horticultural magazines combined. Wayside's magnificent catalog is filled from cover to cover with the world's finest garden subjects. Everything, just everything from perennials to shrubs and trees, Holland's finest bulbs, exotic lilies, vines and ground covers.

Everything is carefully described and colorfully illustrated with almost 600 subjects shown in beautiful true-color photographs large enough to see clearly and know what you are buying.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR[®]

"Here, you can use this to get to the lawn mower."

A note from Rosemary indicates she is the most popular counselor at camp. More frogs have turned up in her bunk than in any of the others.

Bill and Isabel Norman report that their daughter has been married long enough now so some of the furniture she "borrowed" is beginning to trickle back.

Judy's 10-year-old pal, Ellen Laverty, says that people who complain about the problems of touring with children ought to try touring with parents some time.

Our nearest lake for weekend recreation is so convenient, it only takes 45 minutes to drive there. Except, of course, on weekends, when it takes three hours.

The communication gap is bad enough between generations now. Imagine how it will be when medical science extends our life span to 300 years, and we have to worry about how those 100-year-old kids dress, dance, wear their hair, and drag race.

Nick Hanfli, our popular Congressman, down-rates his chances of being a favorite-son candidate in 1968. "Listen," he told me, "when you come from a family as big as mine you can't even be sure you're the favorite son with your own mother."

The new high-school football coach spoke to my civic club the other day, and we all came away feeling guilty that we aren't bringing up our boys any bigger.

I returned from our vacation trip convinced about the source of much of America's economic strength. It's the ability of people all over the country to sell the same souvenirs to one another.

Christine thought it was a nice compliment when, early in our marriage, I told her how much I appreciated her sense of humor. She didn't realize then how often she was going to need it.

Everybody wins some sort of prize at the country club's golf tournament. After some thought this year, the committee finally came up with a new category for me: Most Interesting Swing.

A bright young architect who recently moved into our town asked permission to take some photographs of our house. Chris bleakly predicts that he intends to use them as Horrible Examples.

My children are fascinated by Uncle Dodd Buckner's stories of the early days, but they wink at each other when he tries to persuade them that the pioneers headed west without either sunglasses or tinted windshields.

I stopped at newspaper Editor Joe Lyons' office recently and found him half-buried in the morning's mail. "If the disarmament negotiators in Geneva ever reach success," he moaned, "I hope their next project will be to take all the mimeograph machines away from government agencies."

Pretty divorcee Elaine Cowan was doing very well dating a husky bachelor—until fishing season opened and he departed with his men friends for the backwoods. Now she calls him the big one that got away.

"The American invention the world can most easily do without," says Uncle Dodd Buckner, "is that tasteless, colorless, shapeless blob, the standard loaf of white bread."

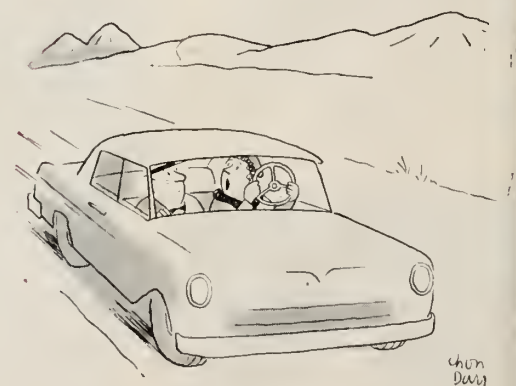

On a tour of the house the other evening, I noted the following items:

A half-finished 1964 radio set being built by my son in the basement; five pairs of ice skates; assorted swimming suits (damp); bongo drums; a painting of a sunset by my older daughter; record albums by both the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and The Animals; a sheaf of papers marked, "Collected Poems of Judy Hillis. Do Not Read Under Penalty of Death"; four tattered baseball gloves; various collections of stamps, butterflies, arrowheads, coins, and recipes; wings from three model airplanes; one clarinet; portions of two sets of golf clubs; a chart of the January stars (on the ceiling of the family room); an antique desk being sanded down; 1½ canoe paddles; a nearly-completed woven rug; the reading list for my every-two-weeks discussion group; a tent, five sleeping bags, and a camp stove; skis for both water and snow; one jar labeled "Scientific Experiment. Do Not Disturb."

"Well," I told Christine, "we seem to be in good shape. For the sake of creative leisure, our interests seem to be satisfactorily broad."

"That's fine," said Chris. "Although, for the sake of creative housekeeping, I wish we could narrow them just a little."

'GOOD ART' or 'BAD ART'

...what would your judgment be?

THE STORM by Pierre Auguste Cot

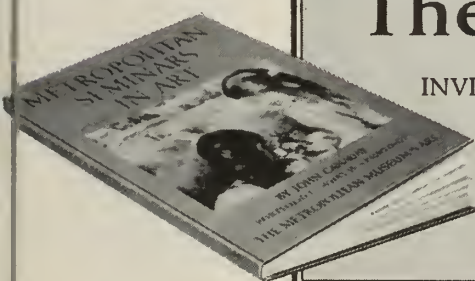

HERE ARE TWO PAINTINGS, both of the same subject, and both discussed in the first portfolio of the Metropolitan Museum's Seminars in Art program. The one at left was held in the highest critical esteem in the 1880s. Today it would be dismissed by most critics as mawkishly sentimental. The other painting was damned as degenerate in the early part of this century. Now it is considered to be one of the finest examples of expressionist art. If you were unexpectedly asked to judge these paintings, would you be able to express a well-reasoned opinion? Or would you, like so many people, be tongue-tied, fearful of exposing ignorance by making any comment at all? A surprising number of otherwise cultivated persons have a blind spot as far as painting is concerned. Visiting a museum, they stand before a famous or respected work of art and see nothing beyond what the painting is "about"— and frequently they are unsure even of that.

Anyone who suffers from this form of bafflement probably never has had the opportunity to take a good art appreciation course at a university or attend a clarifying series of lectures at a museum. It was to remedy this situation that the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York devised an unusual program of assisted self-education in the understanding and appreciation of art. The invitation below is made to acquaint you with the thorough nature of the program and particularly its unique method of learning by comparison among great paintings.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art

INVITES YOU TO ACCEPT FOR TWO WEEKS' EXAMINATION

THE FIRST PORTFOLIO OF

ART SEMINARS IN THE HOME

Published and administered by Book-of-the-Month Club, Inc.

THE IDEA: A well-rounded and comprehensive course of lectures in the appreciation of art in which the whole family can participate. You learn by comparison among paintings, utilizing no fewer than 144 large full-color prints of great masterpieces. It is like being conducted over a period of time through all of the world's museums by experienced lecturers who make clear the fundamental things to look for in whatever paintings you may ever see.

THE LESSON comes in the form of a portfolio, the first of which is the lecture. But in each portfolio is a booklet containing twelve large full-color reproductions.

CONTENTS OF THE TWELVE PORTFOLIOS

What Is a Painting? • Realism Expressionism • Abstraction • Pictures as Patterns • Pictures as Structures
Arrangement as Expression • Fresco
Opera and Oil • Water Color, Pastel
Prints • The Artist as a Social Critic
The Artist as a Visionary

ductions. These pictures are provided separately so that they can be compared side by side with one another to clarify whatever points the lecture aims to illuminate. They have a great advantage, however, over reproductions thrown upon a screen in a lecture hall: they can be more faithful to the originals, can be studied for as long as one wants, and can be referred to again and again. Another advantage is that members of a family can "take the course" either separately or simultaneously—husband and wife, parent and teen-age child. Reading each portfolio aloud, and examining the reproductions together, is like visiting a museum together, pointing out to one another something to be appreciated and enjoyed.

HOW THE COURSE OPERATES • One can enroll in this program of twelve portfolios just as one would enroll in a semester course in art at a university—with one important difference: you may, if you wish, drop out of the program at any point without proceeding with the complete course. The portfolios are sent consecutively—one every thirty days—but you may, of course, proceed at whatever rate you choose. The price of each portfolio is $3.75 (plus a small charge for mailing expense). This cost includes the twelve separate full-color reproductions, mat size 9½" by 12½", which come with each portfolio. In most retail stores each set of twelve would sell by itself, in comparable reproductions, for from $6 to $7.50.

Mrs. Bainer had high hopes for her new Maytag.

16 years later she had a problem. How do you retire an old washer that just won't quit?

Mrs. Loren Bainer, of Fremont, California, had a problem.

After 16 years of washing as many as 30 loads a week, her Maytag still wouldn't quit. (A few minor repairs by Mr. Bainer were all it needed over the years.)

But Mrs. Bainer wanted a New Generation Maytag Washer, with its giant capacity and many cycles. She dropped plenty of hints, but nothing seemed to work.

Until Mother's Day, 1967. That's when the family surprised her with a new Maytag Washer and Dryer (with Electronic Control, for permanent-press clothes).

What happened to the old Maytag? Well, the little girl in the top picture is the Bainers' oldest daughter, Shari. She's married now—and has adopted Mom's Maytag.

We can't promise that every Maytag will have the performance Mrs. Bainer has enjoyed, but dependability is what we aim to build into every Maytag. If laundry's the last thing you want to worry about, see the New Generation of dependable Maytags, available in decorator colors.

CAR INSURANCE— IS THERE ANY WAY BUT UP?

By Peter Lindberg, Money Management Editor

THE PROBLEM

If you haven't heard at least one story of woe about increasing auto insurance premiums lately, you probably have been out of the country—or at least not reading your paper. One of the most common complaints is that auto insurance premiums have risen steadily in the past ten years until they now stand about 55 percent higher than they were in 1956. Other stories tell of growing numbers of drivers who have had insurance policies canceled for minor traffic violations, or of areas like Dade County, Florida, where several companies have stopped writing liability insurance. Some policyholders (especially older drivers) tell you they've been dropped by their auto insurance company for no apparent reason.

JUST WHERE DOES THE TRUTH LIE?

Probably well short of what you'd expect from the statements above. Some companies, mostly the "fly-by-nights" are dropping policyholders who become poor risks. In states where rates have been severely restricted, even larger, established firms have had to cancel policyholders with only slightly tarnished driving records.

Yet at the end of 1966, there were 102 million drivers in this country, most of whom obviously still had auto insurance.

Today few companies could afford to trim off great chunks of premium income, even though a good share of it is now just barely profitable. (One major company, for instance, sets its loss ratio, or the amount of premium money paid out in claims, at 70 percent.) Most of the big insurance companies specify in writing exactly what they consider grounds for cancellation, such as use of the car to commit a felony, or repeated drunken-driving or speeding convictions. One of the largest auto insurers now even offers a five-year renewal guarantee on all coverages, subject to cancellation only if you don't pay premiums, or if you or other members of your family lose your license.

It is true, though, that premiums have increased significantly in recent years. Nationwide, increases have ranged from 5 to 10 percent a year, and in some states, premiums have gone up 20 to 25 percent in one year.

WHY THIS INCREASE IN PREMIUMS?

There are two basic causes: (1) the rising cost of car repairs and medical expenses, and (2) the increasing number of auto accidents.

Take the case of the Minnesota restaurant executive, on his way home during a sudden rainstorm. He miscalculated his speed, went into a skid—and became one half of a two-car collision. Weeks later, when the details had been sorted out, he came face-to-face with the high cost of being a traffic casualty. Repairs on his new station wagon came to $1,499.50, and hospital and surgical fees ran $1,830.00. His car insurance paid for all but $100 of the repair bill, and medical insurance took care of everything but $200 of the medical costs. If this same accident had occurred ten years earlier, costs would have been much less—$996.00 to restore his car, and about $1,000 for medical expenses.

The reason for this painful increase in repair costs? First, garage repairmen's wages—like those in other industries—have climbed steadily. In one sample region, hourly charges for repairmen went from $5.50 an hour in 1961 to $7 an hour in 1966. In the last ten years, car parts prices have jumped too, from 50 to 100 percent.

And there's another steadily rising cost factor: theft. In the past ten years, car thefts have doubled, totaling a half million in 1966. Since far fewer stolen cars are recovered intact now, companies run head on into higher parts and labor costs, as well as high total replacement costs (about one-fourth more now to replace a lower-priced car than in 1956).

A breakdown of medical expenses for the same six-year period makes equally discouraging reading. A hospital room that cost you $34.98 a day in 1961 would run $48.83 a day in 1966. In '61, doctors' fees were about nine percent above their 1957-59 level; by '66, they—in line with other professional fees—had climbed 28 percent above 1957-59 level.

Our growing accident toll—the other basic cause of the boost in auto insurance premiums—is no more encouraging. By the end of this year, experts predict, 53,500 people will die and more than two million will be injured. The outlook for following years won't be any brighter, if you consider the following trend:

	1961	1966	Percentage of increase
Deaths	38,000	53,000	39%
Disabling injuries	1,400,000	1,900,000	36%

Why this steady gain in accident and death rates? At the end of 1966, there were 94 million vehicles registered in this country—four million more than at the beginning of that year. And of the 102 million drivers in '66, four million were added during that year. With these increases—and the resulting pressure on our streets and highways—it's no surprise that traffic deaths and injuries are increasing 58 percent faster than car registrations.

THE ANSWERS NOW

The rising car-repair and medical bills, the increase in accidents—these mean more and costlier claims to be paid. Some insurance firms, especially those in states where rates are held to low levels, have turned to belt-tightening practices that raise the ire of policyholders. Yet the insurance industry—and others concerned with car safety—have worked out means of slowing the increase in rates. These include:

● Good-driver plans. This catchall term covers a number of plans. Basically, they give drivers who haven't had accidents or moving violations anywhere from 10 to 20 and 25 percent lower premiums. Variations range from young driver or student-driver plans (with about 15 percent discounts to drivers completing approved training courses) down to compact car discount plans.

● Immediate claim settlements. Traditionally, payments are made only after the extent of injuries and damages have been pinned down exactly; until this is done (and it can take weeks, months, or even years), a seriously injured driver or passenger may miss out on critical rehabilitation treatment, and at the same time can face a staggering set of bills. With the payment-in-advance plan, as soon as the company decides their insured was at fault (and this usually requires a few days at most), payments for out-of-pocket expenses are made immediately to the injured party. Although this plan is somewhat limited in scope at present, it's being expanded.

● Uninsured motorist protection. Available from most companies for $3 to $5 a year extra, this gives drivers and their families protection against injuries caused by uninsured motorists. Some of these plans also include protection against damage or injury caused by a motorist whose insurance company is insolvent (23 states require this as part of the uninsured motorist package).

Though three states have laws requiring liability insurance, so many drivers ignored them that the states enacted compulsory uninsured motorist coverage laws too. And at best, the laws requiring liability insurance don't protect a driver who's been injured by a hit-and-run driver, the driver of a stolen car, or an uninsured out-of-state driver.

● Guaranteed coverage. Many companies now write liability policies that include a non-cancellation provision. The periods of guaranteed coverage vary, in one instance extending as long as five years.

Check to be sure you have this guarantee. Remember, though, that it isn't the single most important part of your coverage, since studies in several states show that only a small fraction of insured drivers ever have policies canceled. In Wisconsin, for example, a recent study indicated that slightly more than one-half of one percent of a million-plus policies were canceled in mid-term for reasons other than nonpayment. (Of those canceled, the under-25 and over-65 drivers were hit proportionately less hard.)

● Estimating services. To offset the rising costs of car repair, several companies now have their own claim services and estimators. When your car is damaged you get an estimate (often at a drive-in office), receive a check for the damage, and take the car to one of several garages who previously agreed to accept the insurance company's figures. By working out these agreements on parts and labor costs in advance with various garages, companies reduce the time spent on estimates by the garage, as well as the constant (and often successful) pressure toward fraud. At present, this company estimating plan is widely available, though primarily in urban areas.

● Safety programs. For years, insurance companies have supported safety programs of every description, from setting up and helping finance driver training classes (including devices that simulate driving) to contributing substantially to the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety. Annual industry contributions to this safety institute alone are set at two million dollars.

● Assigned Risk. From the viewpoint of a policyholder paying its relatively high premiums, an assigned risk plan is a dubious advantage. To the insurance company, though, it's a service (compulsory in all states) that furnishes liability coverage to poor drivers who couldn't otherwise get coverage. Contrary to what some critics say, insurance companies don't make money writing assigned-risk plans; for every $10 taken in as premiums, companies pay out an average of $9 in claims (which doesn't include business operating costs). Since assigned risk plans first came out in 1938, companies estimate total claim losses at $160 million more than total premiums taken in.

Granted, there are cases of responsible drivers—a high-mileage salesman, or an older driver—who are suddenly forced into assigned risk plans. On the whole, though, this number is small, since assigned risk represents less than four percent of all auto liability premiums written.

When a good driver does find himself in an assigned risk category because of his location (such as a teeming metropolitan area) or because he's become part of a high-risk group of drivers, he often can work himself back into regular coverage by maintaining a good driving record. And he can console himself that he's paying far less than the really poor driver, who must pay extremely high surcharges attached to his own assigned risk plan.

● Special Risk coverage. Instead of getting into an assigned-risk plan, the poor or high-risk driver can apply for insurance through insurers specializing in high-risk policies. Like the assigned-risk coverage, special-risk policies are expensive; they also offer less protection than regular policies (few include medical payments).

WHAT'S AHEAD

In spite of efforts by safety and insurance leaders, the cost of car insurance still is growing. Yet the future is neither as grim as some critics would have you believe—nor as rosy as others would like to think. Briefly, here's a look at solutions:

REDUCTION OF ACCIDENTS

Obviously, this is the key to cutting the high cost of insurance. There isn't much reason to hope that medical and car-repair bills will decrease in the years ahead.

With impetus from the 1966 Highway Safety Act, reduction of accidents is now more likely than it once was (though it would be overly optimistic to think we can sweep bad drivers from the road overnight). According to this act, states that don't have approved highway safety programs by 1969 can lose up to ten percent of their federal highway funds; an approved program must measure up to 13 standards, covering such areas as licensing, vehicle inspection, and driver training and examination.

Though there are several ways to cut accidents, experts generally agree the three following form the strongest combination:

● Driver training programs—considered by some to be the single most important factor in cutting accidents—would be brought up to a single high level by safety act standards. Right now, programs (and teacher training) vary markedly from state to state; as even the most vocal driver-training advocates admit.

● Driver licensing. There are few precise figures available on the benefits of stricter licensing. Yet when you consider that roughly 10 million drivers haven't taken written or driving tests—let alone physicals—in 20 to 40 years, you can see that the starting point is clear.

In many states, present physical and mental standards for drivers' licenses are rudimentary at best. At least 19 states grant licenses to those who can't read or write English—and in one state, drivers' tests are printed in Spanish (though none of the state's highway signs are in Spanish).

Once one of the least promising areas for improvement, driver licensing procedures are one of the main targets of the newly created highway safety agency. Its standards—backed by the fund-withdrawal stipulation—would put both licensing and reexamination on far more selective levels.

● Vehicle inspection—often considered the next most important factor in cutting the accident rate—also is in dire need of upgrading. Now, only 29 states (plus the District of Columbia) have any vehicle inspection, and few of these programs test exactly the same items. It is well known that vehicle failure is a leading cause of accidents—one recent study shows that it accounts for 11 percent of all fatalities. Another survey points up worn tires as the cause of a high percentage of freeway accidents.

Under the safety act standards, annual vehicle inspection is required. New vehicles (and those involved in fatal crashes) need to be inspected before they ever gain access to the highways.

Coupled with other measures—from driver rehabilitation for chronic offenders to regular enforcement of suspended or revoked licenses—these three safety improvements are the really promising areas to cut accidents. And when this is done, rising costs of insurance should be held down.

STRONGER SAFEGUARDS AGAINST INSOLVENCY

To reduce the number of potentially unstable companies, as well as those with questionable practices, the insurance industry is pressing for more thorough, uniform state insolvency procedures. Primary goals here are more streamlined examinations of companies by larger, better-budgeted insurance department staffs.

NEW RATE-SETTING METHODS

Faced with continually increasing claim costs, insurance leaders say their premium rates shouldn't require prior approval by state insurance bodies. Though on the face of it, this appears to open the door to even higher premiums, companies say it's not so. They point to states like California, where prior approval of insurance rates hasn't been required for years, and where companies have had generally low profits—yet few failures.

The net profit in such states runs about two to three percent, compared with the usually recognized business standard of six percent. Why? For one reason, because business competition alone tends to keep premiums at low levels—and encourages firms to originate new coverage benefits to draw customers.

ENDING DUPLICATE COVERAGE

Since Medicare has become law, insurance companies are finding more and more instances where they pay medical expenses for an injured claimant—and the government does too. Right now, 19 million residents are covered by Medicare, and two million more may soon be added. Current laws permit this double coverage, yet if insurers were freed of this burden, it definitely would reduce climbing medical claims costs. In European countries with extensive government welfare benefits, this duplicate coverage has been eliminated by legislation.

Among several other solutions to the auto insurance dilemma, here are two that have been receiving increasing attention.

● The no-fault principle, which would settle claims on a workmen's-compensation-like basis, involves altering the established legal principle of paying for your own negligence. In essence, auto accident claims would be settled by insurance firms without regard for who was to blame: each company would pay for its own policyholder's losses. This proposal is still highly controversial.

● The group-purchase plan, being tested by several firms, offers auto insurance to employee groups. Premiums are collected through payroll deductions, which allows some operating-cost cuts. However, most group auto programs now rate buyers separately, which creates administrative costs that must be paid—and so far no employers have agreed to make up the premium differential between good and bad risks, as they do on group health and life insurance. As expected, this makes the current group plan less than attractive to insurers, especially those who do much business through agents.

Unfortunately, none of these new ideas promise a reduction in auto insurance rates. But there may come a day when they hold their own—no mean feat in an increasingly expensive economy.

HOW YOU CAN HELP CUT AUTO INSURANCE COSTS

- Be a more careful, courteous driver. Help reduce the accident rate.
- Support traffic safety programs both on your state and on national level.
- Encourage consistent enforcement procedures.
- Check on the quality of your driver education program in your school (school board and state board of education officials can assist you).
- If you have an insurance claim—either for auto damage or bodily injury—ask just what you are entitled to.
- Remove keys from your ignition and lock car doors whenever you park.
- Serve on juries if you are asked to.

SEEDING A LAWN

Whether you're seeding to rejuvenate an existing lawn or start a new one—fall is the ideal time to take care of the job. Here's how to get a new or old lawn in top shape.

SEEDING BARE SPOTS

Rake the lawn with a broom rake to remove debris accumulations from summer months. If that is heavy, use a multipurpose rake (shown) to move it and other refuse. Once this is cleared away, you can see more clearly the areas that need repair. Reseed bare spots in late August or early September — new grass puts on best growth during cool fall days.

Roughen up bare spots to a depth of an inch or more with a speedy cultivator, as shown, to provide a seedbed. Sprinkle area with lawn food and rake level. If worn areas compacted from heavy foot traffic, turn soil to depth of 6 inches. Dig out peat moss or leaf mold to give it needed spring moisture-retentive qualities so new grass has better chance for survival.

Choose a top-quality grass seed. To insure better coverage in shaded areas, plant a seed mixture specially prepared for such locations; in sunny areas, plant a pure strain of the desired variety. Sow seed by hand on small areas about 6 seeds per square inch. If planted too thickly, seedlings compete for water, nutrients, and light, so all suffer. Mix thoroughly with water.

Get seed off to a fast start by covering repaired areas with sheets of clear polyethylene, held in place by stones, until seed germinates. This eliminates need for sprinkling. Remove covering when first seedlings appear and keep soil moist by misting 2 or 3 times a day until grass is an inch tall. Water weekly until grass is 3 inches tall and ready for first mowing.

NEW LAWNS

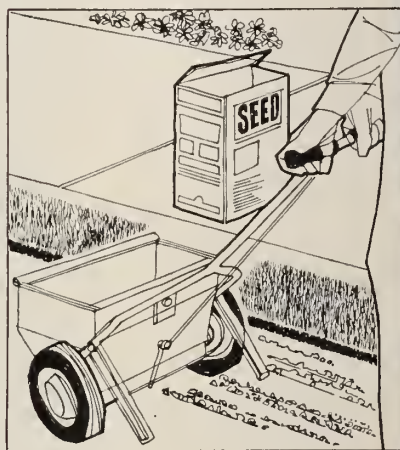

Seedbed preparation is the most important step in the establishment of a new lawn. Once a lawn is growing, it is difficult to improve the soil, so now's the time to work organic matter, such as peat moss or leaf mold, into deeply turned soil. This is a long, hard job when done by hand, but comparatively easy with a rotary tiller, available at rental agencies.

Level the soil of area to be seeded so it is 2 inches below the surface of adjacent drive, walks, and curbs—3 inches where sod is to be laid. With a spreader, distribute lawn food evenly over soil at rate recommended on bag, and rake it in. To prevent soil from splashing on walks and drives while seedlings get established, border with a strip of sod.

Use a lawn spreader to get even distribution of seed—hand-seeding large areas is undependable, usually resulting in a patchy, too heavily planted turf. Sow seed at the rate recommended on the package for the variety being planted. As blue-grasses need some direct sunlight on seed to trigger germination, rake seed only lightly into soil so it is barely covered.

Keep soil moist with 2 or 3 light sprinklings during day—more if weather is unusually warm and sunny. Continue this schedule until seedlings are an inch tall: By then roots have struck deeply so you need to water heavily only once a week until after fourth or fifth mowing. Then, water only during long periods of heat and drought, but deeply when you do.

Dining Room—Dover Temlok® Tile

Kitchen—Woodcrest Cushiontone® Tile

Den—Gridline™ Suspended Ceiling

Most people think Armstrong Ceilings are expensive. But they're not, as the prices above prove. And those prices are for an average-sized room—12 by 14 feet.

Take a look at the Armstrong Ceiling in the dining room. It has deeply beveled edges that give it an inlaid panel effect. Stapling makes it easy to install. Costs about $41.

The kitchen ceiling is a vinyl-coated tile that's especially easy to wash. Its vinyl finish lets you remove greasy cooking film with just a wipe of a sponge. And it's acoustical—cuts down on kitchen clatter. Costs less than $50.

If you have exposed pipes and wires overhead, you'll want an Armstrong Suspended Ceiling, like the one in the den at right. A suspended ceiling hangs in a metal frame that's attached to your old ceiling. In the one shown above, the ceiling panels hang slightly below the frame, creating a three-dimensional effect. About $75.

Take a look at all the different Armstrong Ceilings at your lumber dealer's. Many are acoustical. All are easy to install yourself. All cost surprisingly little.

HELP YOUR CHILD LEARN MORE... BETTER... FASTER

By Martin Mayer

Your children are learning all the time: they learn much more and they learn much faster than you do. Indeed, you can't stop them from learning. What you mean when you say "They don't learn" is really, "They learn the wrong things." Instead of learning long division, they learn how to get along with (or protect themselves against) the teacher, or how to get the goat of the kid at the next table. Instead of learning table manners, they learn about the different musical sounds made by water glasses. But they're always learning.

Children don't all learn at the same speed, and each one is better at some kinds of learning than at others. Any one child, like any one man, may be marching out of step (as Thoreau once put it) because he hears a different drummer.

Still, it does make a difference what children learn, and the "progressives" of a generation ago were simply wrong when they told us that children by themselves will choose the right things to learn, the way animals choose the right foods to eat. (John Dewey once argued that there wasn't much point in teaching reading at all, because normal children learn to read anyway around the age of eight!) Today, if anything, we go overboard the other way. Freudian psychiatrist Erik Erikson and psychologist Benjamin Bloom of the University of Illinois have agreed that just as different organs in the fetus must develop at the right time or a baby will be born defective, children must learn certain skills on schedule or the loss can never be wholly made up. This theory underlies our emphasis on "Head Start" programs in slum neighborhoods.

What we now know for sure is that the basic natural equipment our children bring into the world is precisely the same as that brought in by the babies of five thousand years ago. According to the Indian biologist L. B. Medawar, we are all born into the Stone Age and in theory could remain there. Everything we can do that cavemen couldn't do is the result of learning.

For all our complaining, we are remarkably successful at this job of bringing millions of little Stone Age savages into a modern industrial society. But we aren't efficient at it—we waste a lot of their time and ours. Too often we let children stumble and fall on the way.

Too often we don't know what we're doing: we haven't thought about how our children learn, and about how well our teaching procedures, in schools or at home, match up with the learning procedures of the small human animal. Not that anybody knows precisely how learning occurs. But 2,500 years of philosophers' speculation and 100 years of psychologists' experiments have given us a good deal of valuable data.

Psychologists have two very different explanations of how children learn. The more "scientific" theorists work with animals like rats and pigeons, and stress what they call "re-

Continued

1. Listen to your child

Really listen—which is hard. Make sure your child explains his problem until you understand it; that helps him understand it, too. Take things one at a time—what he did, how and when, and why he thinks he has troubles.

2. Give help, not answers

The important question is not whether you know how to do some problem in your child's schoolwork, but whether he knows how to do it. Hints and similar examples are what's wanted—not something he can write down in your words.

3. Accentuate the positive

Go over with your child the things he's done right as well as the things he's done wrong, and be sure to give him a good word for being right. This "reinforcement" of valid learnings is a central need. Sometimes while going over what's right, he'll figure out for himself the places where he went wrong.

4. Forget how you learned it

Even if you think the school is teaching subtraction or spelling improperly, you have to play along. Find out how his teacher wants him to do it—that's what your PTA is for. This insistence that you do things the school's way doesn't mean everything new is right and everything old is wrong. It simply means the children can't fight City Hall. Once your child has learned to do something the new way, then you can describe to him—as a matter of interest, and maybe as a help when he's puzzled—your old way of handling the same problem. But wait until he's learned what his school says he needs to know.

5. Give him ways to use what he learns

Thank-you letters are not just good manners: they're writing practice. Encourage him to keep the box scores and work out the batting averages; let her work out recipes for five portions. On car trips, let the children plan the routes on the map and keep track of the miles and estimated arrival times.

6. Make sure he does the work

There's no television program as important as homework; if it means a couple of good fights with your child, have the fights. If you think the school is giving too much work, tell the teacher, not the child. Nothing a child can learn in school is quite so damaging in the future as the art of making excuses—don't you encourage its perfection. Lots of things in this world are "unfair"—as President Kennedy once said, "Life is unfair." But no one denies that it has to be lived.

7. Keep calm, always

If your child sees that his troubles get you down, he'll be afraid to bring them to you. Then he'll work not in order to learn, but to keep you happy—which means he won't care about the learning itself. Nobody works well when rattled—especially at so mysterious a task as learning.

inforcement." In the most primitive of these experiments, a hungry animal is placed in a cage with two levers protruding through the bars—one marked with a star and the other with a circle. When the rat pushes the lever marked with a star, some pellets of food roll into the cage; when it pushes the one with a circle, nothing happens (or, worse, it gets a small electric shock). Fairly quickly, the rat "learns" to push the lever with the star on it, because this right answer is "reinforced" with food. Incidentally, if too painful an electric shock is administered as punishment for a wrong answer, even a hungry animal may quit trying.

For the human animal, "reinforcement" is the approval of parents or teachers, who tell the child he got the answer right. Indeed, children don't even need people for this: their learning can be "reinforced" by some printed words telling them they're right.

This reinforcement theory turns out to be entirely practical. Professor B. F. Skinner gave regular demonstrations with pigeons to his psychology classes at Harvard. He put a hungry pigeon in a cage and fed it every time its head came above a certain mark. "Higher and higher marks are chosen," Skinner wrote, "until, within a few minutes, the pigeon is walking about the cage with its head held as high as possible."

Skinner decided that what would work with pigeons would also, appropriately adapted, work with children. Starting with a machine designed to give tests—revealing one question at a time, and not moving on to the next question until the student had given his answer—Skinner designed a "teaching machine." After responding to each question displayed by the machine, the student pushed a lever that would immediately reveal the right answer, "reinforcing" his right answer. If he had come up with a wrong answer, the machine at the end of the roll of questions would bring that wrongly answered question back, so he could answer it correctly and still win his "reinforcement."

Other psychologists have worked with animals like dogs and chimpanzees. In a typical experiment, a banana is hung in a cage just outside the chimp's reach. He jumps at it for a while, and then notices there is a packing crate in the corner. Figuring out the situation with a flash of "insight," he pulls the packing crate over to a point under the banana, climbs on it, and presently eats it. In this theory, learning occurs mostly through "seeing" something in a picture which is not properly understood until the element has been picked out, like the faces hidden in trees and benches and buildings in a child's puzzle picture. The psychologist Jerome Bruner explains this sort of learning as the construction of "mediating models" in the mind. There is still a reward at the end, but the chimp or the child knows he has the right answer before he is fed or before teacher says he is right.

Both theories explain some kinds of learning but definitely don't explain other kinds. Nobody ever learned to play the piano through a flash of insight and nobody ever suddenly understood why you can't divide by zero, just because teacher and parents repeatedly reinforced his right answer. Both kinds of learning are necessary as a practical matter, you child has to do his homework and he has to know what he's doing.

Most of these problems will turn over to the schools, but the idea that schools can educate children without their parents' help has collapsed in recent years under pressure of our sad experiences in the slums. On every kind of test—from IQ tests to College Boards—children raised by educated, middle-class, helpful parents do best. Even in our age of universal schooling children learn much of what they need from their parents.

But it's hard for parents to teach their children deliberately. Your first and worst problem is that you care too much, and so does your child. You can't reinforce properly because you're so afraid of displeasing your child that he watches your reaction much more carefully than he watches what he does to deserve it. And when you see a bad report card, or find your child doesn't know something, you were sure he knew, you can't react by just teaching. Unless you're very careful, the electric shocks you give for wrong answers become too painful for the child.

Second, you don't know enough. This becomes very obvious around your child's high school years, but it's always true. Imagine yourself in conversation with somebody from the Middle Ages, and try to think of an argument that would convince him that, say, the earth goes round the sun—or a statement of scientific principle to explain why salt dissolves in water much more easily than sugar. To the extent that learning occurs by a flash of insight—by fitting a new piece into the picture—there are many subjects in which you may know the right answer, but you don't know enough of the picture to indicate how or where the answer fits.

Your third difficulty is that you can't remember a child's world. For example, how did you think words were spelled before you learned to spell them correctly? You can't put yourself in your child's place and see which bits of learning need to be reinforced, or which pieces of the picture are missing from his understanding.

Here a well-trained teacher has the edge on any parent. The teacher's rewards can be better calculated to reinforce important learnings. The teacher has school books and maps and films to create the surroundings for insight; and the teacher has herself been taught (or has learned through hard experience) at least something of how a topic in geography or science or grammar looks to a child.

Your advantage over the teacher is that you have time to listen to your own child. With all the good will in the world, a teacher has a class to teach, and cannot often stop to extract from a child the full story of how he got his wrong answer. Even if you can spare only an hour a night, you can listen much more than a teacher can.

Usually, your "handle" on the situation will be the homework. Nearly every child asks his parents once in a while for help with his homework—and despite what some professor of education once may have said, you should never turn him down. The trick is to remember (which your child won't) that the point of helping is not to supply right answers so he gets good grades, but to help him figure out problems for himself.

When you look over your child's homework, be sure to praise right answers before you criticize wrong ones. Your first obligation is to "reinforce" what he has in fact learned. And when you tell him he has something wrong, don't make a federal case of it: he's entitled to make mistakes (you've made some yourself).

There's also an important practical reason for rewarding right answers. They can help you and your child find ways to solve problems that look to him are similar to those turned out to be easy. Often he'll see where he went wrong before you do, and make his own corrections. Then you can be confident that you help him learn.

Sometimes, of course, a child just can't solve a problem. Help him to find the place in the book where he gets stuck, go over the page with him. You'll often find he thinks a method in the textbook works. Ask him then to tell you what the teacher said on that subject—keeping in mind, of course, that he won't tell you what the teacher really said. You can tell you only what he thought the teacher said—but from your point of view, that's all that matters.

Obviously, you have to help with your homework, too. If your child's school teaches subjects differently from the way he learned them, use your PTA to find out how and why. If you don't work with the school, you'll only confuse your child.

Unfortunately, schoolwork sometimes leads a child astray because many textbooks and "curriculum guides" are carelessly prepared. A child who learned the common "rule" that when two vowels come together you forget the first sound the second (as in beer, bier) is obviously going to be in trouble with words like fear, learn, fair, hour, or boy. Teaching fractions as segments of a pie (which is usual) rather than as places between whole numbers on a number line (which is still rare) may cause trouble later when children have to handle problems where the answer is $\frac{5}{4}$.

But these are questions of sequence more than of fundamental teaching approach. Indeed, they point up the real contribution you can make by adding to what the school offers, to make a larger picture. Often this just means giving your child ways to use what he has been learning in school, thereby providing both reinforcement and a sense of where the subject fits. When a child complains that something he's asked to learn isn't "useful," it usually means he doesn't understand it. Showing him a use in it proves his understanding.

Old-fashioned tactics can be valuable here—like making it

What makes Drexel furniture so special?

ESPERANTO—a bold Mediterranean statement of Drexel attention to quality details and unusual design in veneer construction. The cost of the famous block-front credenza is about $349.50 (slightly higher West). For a booklet collection of all Drexel's furniture styles, send 50¢ to Drexel Furniture Company, 154 Huffman Road, Drexel, North Carolina 28619.

Things like authentic block fronts. As in Esperanto.

Drexel's Block Front. Is there a difference? You won't ask when you realize the extra steps Drexel takes to produce this quality look that can't be copied. Nor cheapened. Just to shape and mold the difficult block front, Drexel throws away more wood than remains. On this famous Esperanto credenza there are 60 separate pieces of wood—15 on each door. No imitation can approximate the depth, the richness, the handmade look.

One more example of Drexel's never-ending effort to anticipate your pleasure . . . of the added thought and care that make Drexel the most trusted name in furniture. And so special for you.

DECORATING WRONGS MADE RIGHT

A foyer should subtly suggest the personality of your home and the style in which it is furnished. Your best approach: put the decorating emphasis on background, use a minimum of furniture, and choose an easy-care floor covering.

Even the most gregarious guest would be depressed by this gloomy foyer. Dark background, black chair frames, and a heavy console contribute to the bleak, forbidding atmosphere. Danger lurks in this foyer too. The skiddable area rug is a traffic hazard as well as a cleaning problem.

Buying Guide, page 112

Photographs: Hopkins

Just wave the magic wand of color over this foyer, and see it mushroom in size. The light walls and floor, airy trompe l'oeil mural, and horizontal lines of the ledge visually stretch the space. Small telephone bench slides under the ledge when not in use, and the easy-to-clean vinyl tile flooring takes in stride a steady stream of day-to-day traffic.

A remodeling that's more than an inside job

By Elizabeth Gilrain, Associate Editor, Western States

Photographs de Gennaro. Designer: Gere Kavanaugh

Thinking about remodeling? It's probably time you did if your house was built before 1950. The rooms probably don't work as well as they did when your family was smaller, your way of life simpler. So go ahead: enlarge them, improve them, reorganize them. But also consider the outside of the house. If you remodel extensively, chances are good you'll change the exterior's appearance, too. But don't let the change "just happen" as a result of interior remodeling. With an integrated, well-planned scheme, you can remodel the outside of your house while you're doing the inside. Look how well it worked here.

Top: Twenty years ago this one-story was considered cute; today it's out-of-date. The dormer over the kitchen eating space looks contrived; windows in the living room are numerous and large, but admit very little light; a poorly located entry dumps traffic into the middle of the living room. The entire front looks busy and cluttered.

Above: Now the choppy exterior has a clean, graceful look. The lengthened porch accents the broad expanse of glass across the living room; a new entry reroutes traffic through the end of the room; a dramatic, 14-foot gable replaces the chunky little dormer.

Right: A big, ceramic brick hearth replaces a small conventional model, helps create tall book storage at the side. Light from the new windows bathes the entire room. Casements along the bottom open for ventilation.

Below right: The gable turns a tiny breakfast nook into a smart dining area; now two big windows instead of one admit plenty of light. The new floor is brick-patterned vinyl.

"We can read Dr. Seuss all by ourselves!"

You'll know something special is happening the moment your child first turns, wide-eyed, from the lovable DR. SEUSS creatures and their antics to the words that tell about them. Word by word, phrase by phrase, he follows the print... excitement grows until the secret can't be kept a moment longer and he shouts in joyous discovery: "I can read it myself!" That's the way an early love of reading starts... with beguiling BEGINNER BOOKS by Dr. Seuss and his friends, all filled with the humor children love, all written in easy "beginner" words your child already knows or will quickly pick up.

Take these

3 BEGINNER BOOKS

FOR

(Publisher's Catalog price $5.85) with trial enrollment in the Beginning Readers' Program

How does love of reading begin? For millions of children it has started with membership in the BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM — a proven program of reading enrichment, tested and approved by teachers, and loved by parents, teachers and tots alike. The country's best children's reading program, it is the only one that offers BEGINNER BOOKS by DR. SEUSS and other gifted writers and artists.

A whole parade of sunny, funny books in words young children know or can easily learn!

Belonging to the program is a joy for boys and girls. For BEGINNER BOOKS tell fascinating tales about such fabulous creatures as a fly who can write in the sky... a lovable animal who can take off his polka dots and put them on people... a cat who wears a hat and a balance umbrellas, fishbowls and layer cakes on his paws!

But the importance of the BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM goes far beyond the delightful stories and glorious illustrations. At the same time that it makes reading fun for your child, this planned program subtly helps your child "stretch" his reading and writing abilities.

Each BEGINNER BOOK rewards your child for reading with its humor and excitement... reinforces his desire to read because it makes reading easier... reassures your child with a successful reading experience.

Four isn't too early...
Eight isn't too late

The time to bring the program into your child's life is now, during the critical learning years from 4 to 8. The books are just right for children who are beginning to read; they're perfect, too, for reading aloud to pre-schoolers, who become even more eager to start reading on their own.

As reading authority Margaret Maxwell wrote recently in FAMILY CIRCLE magazine about BEGINNER BOOKS, "Children enjoy books that make them laugh... we both chuckled our way through (Dr. Seuss') rollicking rhymes. Quite casually, without formal effort on my part, Robert learned to recognize the words in these simple stories, and by the time he was five years old, he was a beginning reader."

BEGINNER BOOKS are durably designed to live with a small child. They're printed in at least three bright colors and large readable type. As a member of the BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM, your child will receive a BEGINNER BOOK every month and you will be billed only $1.49 plus a small mailing charge, instead of the publisher's catalog price of $1.95. After four monthly selections, you may cancel membership at any time.

Let DR. SEUSS and his friends delight your child for 10 days FREE!

We invite you to prove the benefits of the BEGINNING READERS' PROGRAM by accepting the three books shown here — a $5.85 value at the publisher's catalog price — for $1.49. Even this small investment in your child's reading and school progress carries no risk. Ten days' FREE trial must convince you the program will stimulate your child's appetite for reading, or you may return the three introductory books and owe nothing. Fill out and mail the attached reply card (or coupon) today.

This may be one of the reasons you buy carpet this year.

If you want a carpet that feels deep, soft and bouncy, you need more than a carpet.

You need B.F. Goodrich carpet cushion underneath.

It makes the carpet feel deep, soft and bouncy. It protects the carpet from wear, from getting bald spots.

We make this cushion out of natural rubber.

That's why it's soft, but not mushy.

That's why it never flattens out, or loses its bounce.

That's why it never mildews or

rots once it's under the carpet, never gets fleas from the family dog or cat, never makes you sneeze if you're allergic.

B.F. Goodrich guarantees your carpet cushion against defects in workmanship and material or we will replace it without charge. Not just for the life of the carpet, but without time limit.

So, to avoid disappointment when you want to buy a deep, soft, bouncy carpet, remember what makes a carpet that way.

And insist on B.F. Goodrich sponge rubber carpet cushion.

If we made it any better, you wouldn't need carpet.

HOW TO CHOOSE A TRAVEL AGENT

You will be trusting a lot to your travel agent, so select him the same way you choose a doctor or lawyer. Take the recommendation of friends whose judgment you value and whose likes and dislikes are similar to yours. They can probably tell you about trips planned for them and give you their evaluations of a travel agent's services.

You might find a doctor or lawyer by calling the county medical society or bar association; for the name of a good travel agent in your community, you can write to the American Society of Travel Agents, 360 Lexington Avenue, New York, New York 10017.

While there are good agents who do not belong to ASTA, it's a safe way to pick a travel agent when you don't have personal knowledge of one. ASTA member agencies are required to adhere to a code of ethical practice, meet recognized industry qualifications, and be in business at least three years before they are permitted to display the ASTA emblem.

If you must consult the phone directory, check Yellow Pages advertising for indications of an agent's business background and standing in the community. If you are in doubt about a travel agent, you can call your local Better Business Bureau for a factual report about the reputation of an agent.

Two very important qualities to look for in a travel agent are personal compatibility and knowledge. You and he should have some common ground for discussing your travel plans.

You should be completely candid—about your budget, your needs, your preferences, what you'd like to get out of each trip. If you like comfort in a hotel—rather than rugged charm—tell your agent. If you prefer metropolitan areas to out-of-the-way spots, be sure he knows that. If you get sick on buses, say so. He will hold the information you give him in confidence. But he can—and should—use all these facts when tailoring a trip for you.

The travel agent's job is to help you use your vacation days wisely, to save you money, and to assure you of maximum comfort, convenience, and enjoyment while traveling. He knows what should be seen, what to buy, what to do, and how much you'll probably spend.

More often than not, he will have traveled where you're going. He generally knows the hotel and resort accommodations first hand, the quality of the restaurants, the courtesy of customs agents, the convenience of transport facilities.

After you've decided on the place, your travel agent can arrange your transportation—by air, ship, bus, rail, or car, or in any combination. He'll prepare individual itineraries, personally escorted tours, or group tours depending on your interests.

Hotel and motel reservations, resort accommodations, meals, sight-seeing, transfers between rail and air terminals and hotels, as well as tickets for special events can all be arranged by your travel agent. He can help you obtain insurance, language study material, travelers checks, mail, foreign currency exchange, passports, visas, and health certificates.

The cost of a travel agent's services is often remarkably modest. A substantial part of his payment comes from commissions received from the transportation carriers and hotels rather than from you. Your airline or steamship ticket, other basic transportation, and a simple hotel reservation will cost you no more when you deal with an agent than if you buy it directly from the carrier or hotel, and in most cases you will find it a lot more convenient.

But more complicated travel services will almost always require a reasonable fee for services rendered. As a general rule, the greater the distance traveled and the longer the stay, the larger the travel agent's fee will be.

Remember that on many trips the travel agent arranges for you—particularly group tours—he obtains accommodations for you at a lower rate than you would pay if you did it yourself. Your costs for his services will vary with the type of trip you plan. But ask him, and he will explain just what your costs will be.

Somebody had to break the rules.

No one knew what to think! Though dressed like a man, there was no mistaking that she was all female. That woman in the first pants suit broke the rules all right. And so did Dash—to create a breakthrough detergent for automatic washers.

To change things for the cleaner, Dash broke the rules:

1 Where conventional detergents recommend you start with $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups per washload, it's only $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cup with Dash. Concentrated fury.

2 Typical detergents whip up lots of suds. But excess suds can dull your wash. So Dash cut-down on suds to give your clothes a clear, clean rinse.

3 Traditional detergents are for use in sinks, tubs, pails, and everywhere else under the sun. But Dash is only for automatics. After all, that's where you wash your clothes. And so that's where Dash concentrates its talents.

No wonder Dash cleans better than any powder made for all automatics.

When you put up aluminum siding you don't have to paint every 3 or 5 years. The original finish is so durable it lasts for years and years.

That's true of all the aluminum building products you use around your house: doors, windows, shutters, gutters, etc., etc., etc.

To keep them clean, just hose them down. They'll look almost new again. And because aluminum doesn't absorb or transmit moisture, there's no flaking or peeling of the finish.

Aluminum can't rust, either. (Not even when it is cut for fitting.) Nor will it warp, rot, split, blister or crack.

Aluminum siding insulates, too. It can help keep your home cooler in the summer and warmer in the winter.

It's not only strong and durable. Aluminum siding is also beautiful. See for yourself. September is Aluminum Siding Month and your dealer has a wide range of decorator colors to show you.

But make sure you choose the color very carefully. You're going to live with it for a long time.

DUANE L. GREGG, Automotive Editor

A QUICK, INEXPENSIVE WAY TO SKIDPROOF ANY CAR!

Would you like your car equipped so it's less likely to slide on wet or icy pavement, stops quickly without fishtailing, and moves in a straight line on soft shoulders or in gusty crosswinds? If your answer is an emphatic "yes," then your car is a prime candidate for an unusual stabilizing device now on the market.

The stabilizer is amazingly simple—just a 42-inch steel tube. Inside the tube, which is about three inches in diameter, is a heavy steel counterweight riding on eight ball bearings and a small amount of oil to provide lubrication for the bearings.

When the car is traveling straight ahead, high tension springs on either end of the weight keep it centered in the tube.

If the rear end of the car shifts—as in a high speed turn, skid, or heavy cross wind—the weight acts as a shifting center of balance to counteract the car's sideways motion.

You can install the stabilizer in your car's trunk, or beneath the rear bumper. It attaches with just two bolts—there are no electrical connections or controls. Once installed, no further maintenance is necessary, and at trade-in time you can transfer the unit to your next car.

In our tests, we installed a stabilizer in several different staff members' cars. The unit received a stiff workout, though we were reluctant to deliberately put the cars into skids and other "panic" situations where it would be most effective.

The stabilizer did make every one of the cars much more controllable on curves. We even worked up the nerve to take some turns at 30 miles an hour over the posted speeds. We drove some corners on wet, slippery asphalt faster than we'd ever tried before—and all this foolishness without a skid.

All drivers who tried the unit noticed their cars were more stable in high crosswinds and the air blasts that accompany big trucks. And in one stiffly sprung compact, the ride seemed much smoother, with more of a "big car" feeling.

All in all, we strongly felt that the device helped, but at the same time wondered if our reactions weren't partly psychological.

So to get a really good look at the stabilizer's capabilities, we asked professional test drivers to put the unit through its paces. In all, they drove four cars—two pairs of identical makes and models. One car in each pair was equipped with the stabilizer.

The driving took place on wet and dry pavement, loose dirt, gravel, and grass—the most unfriendly driving surfaces you will encounter.

In one test the drivers accelerated to 60 miles per hour, then slammed on the brakes for a "panic stop." The car without a stabilizer fishtailed so violently that a less skillful driver might have lost control. The car with the device slowed in a straight line and came to a full stop in less distance than the other.

During another braking test, one driver brought a stabilizer-equipped car from 60 miles per hour to a fast, smooth stop while holding both hands completely off the steering wheel!

What will the unit do in panic situations that do not involve braking? To find out, we asked our drivers to try stunt no sensible motorist would attempt on a public road.

At a speed of 55 miles per hour, each car was purposely steered onto a loose gravel shoulder, then—without slowing down—turned sharply back onto the concrete pavement.

In this series of hair-raising tests, the cars without stabilizers lurched all the way across the two-lane highway and nearly left the pavement on the other side. The cars with stabilizers barely crossed the center line and were under complete control in a little more than half the distance traveled by the unequipped cars.

In every test—for braking, swerving, high-speed cornering—the rear ends of the two cars with stabilizers held the road surface securely; the back wheels never broke loose.

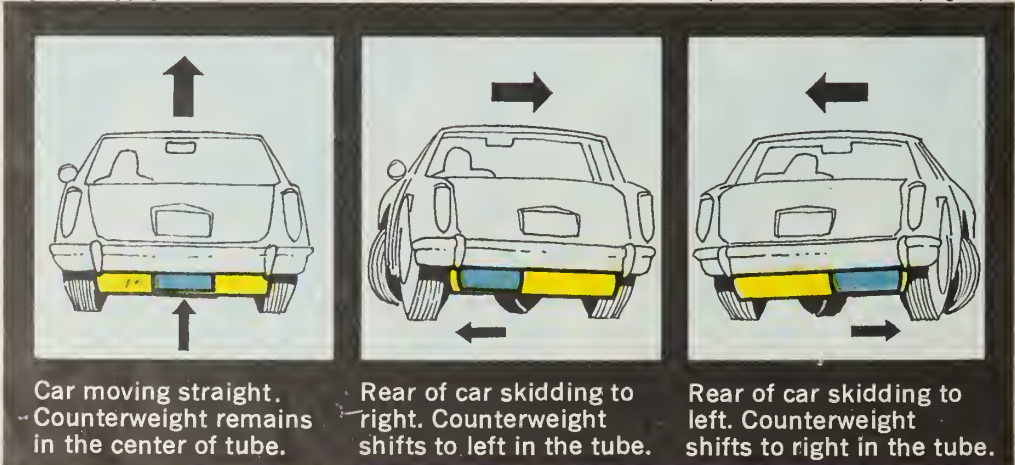

A word of caution, though: the stabilizer is not prescribed as a cure-all. It will help compensate for driver error or lack of judgment, and it may even help pull you out of what would normally be a hopeless situation. But it won't turn the family sedan into a sports car; you can't enter a curve that's posted for 30 miles an hour at 70 and expect this or any other unit to keep your car under control and on the road. It can't repeal the law of gravity to counteract that much excess speed and centrifugal force.

A careful driver with his share of luck will probably never need a stabilizer. But who can foresee the sudden panic situation? And who knows how unexpected weather conditions can change road conditions? One of these units could provide the extra stability to help you maneuver your car out of potential danger and possibly an accident.

Two models of the stabilizer are available: Model #100 for cars weighing less than 3,500 pounds, $89.00; Model #400 for cars that are over 3,500 pounds, $119.95.

ALIGNMENT AND WHEEL BALANCE— HERE ARE THE FACTS!

FRONT END ALIGNMENT

Usually the first tip-off to an impending alignment job is hard steering or excessive tire wear. Steering difficulty can show up in several ways. You may have to exert brute strength to turn the car (especially if it doesn't have power steering). Or the wheels may fail to return to the straight-ahead position after you negotiate a turn. Or your car may lack stability at highway speeds.

The main elements of an alignment job are:

Caster—this term derives from the simple furniture caster. The center of the wheel is offset from the steering pivot point so the wheel travels straight ahead with minimum steering effort.

Camber—the inward or outward tilt of the top of the wheel as viewed from straight on.

Toe-in and toe-out—the inward or outward tilt of the front of the wheels as viewed from straight on. Most cars require some toe-in (a slight "pigeon-toed" condition).

The greatest cause of tire wear is excessive toe-in or toe-out, which creates a drag on the front tires (actually it results in a tire being pushed down the road slightly sideways). Excessive toe-in or toe-out result in badly feathered edges on tire ribs.

Caster gives the tire directional stability, and when properly set makes the front wheels travel in a straight-ahead direction. Improper camber angle causes hard steering, excessive road shock, shimmy, and high-speed wander.

Your first warning of improper camber is excessive tire wear occurring more on one side of the tread than the other.

But a front-end alignment job will not necessarily solve all of your car's steering and tire wear problems. In fact, the money spent for alignment can be money down the drain if certain other conditions are not checked before or during the alignment job:

1. Front suspension components—ball joints, tie rod ends, idler arms, and drag links—must be inspected to be sure they are free to move, yet not too loose.
2. Shock absorbers must be in proper operating condition.
3. Steering gear should be checked for looseness and necessary adjusted or repaired.
4. Torsion bars (if your car has them) must be adjusted to proper tension to assure correct car height.
5. Tires must be in good condition and properly inflated for highway driving.
6. Wheels should be in proper balance, and front wheel bearings in good condition.

A good front-end alignment job will cost from $8.50 to $15 (not including other adjustments or parts that might be necessary). That's a pretty good investment when you consider that improper alignment can reduce tire tread life by 70 percent—and more important, it can even endanger your own life on the road.

Alignment should be checked every 10,000 miles, or after you hit a curb or an unusually severe chuck hole.

WHEEL BALANCE

Wheel balance is of equal importance in getting the maximum mileage from your tires and prolonging the operation of the vital front-end suspension parts of your car. Consider that at 60 miles an hour a wheel 6 ounces out of balance can produce a pounding effect equivalent to hitting the tire with a 45-pound weight. This means that suspension parts, wheel bearings, and shock absorbers take a terrific beating.

Static balance, as the name implies, means that the wheel is in balance when standing still. Most service stations and tire stores have static balancing equipment. The wheel and tire assembly is placed on a machine and weights are added to bring the assembly into balance. True static balance has been achieved when—off the ground and with brakes released—the wheel can be stopped in any position and won't tend to rotate by itself.

Dynamic balance—or balance in motion—is checked by spinning the wheel and tire assembly either on the car or on a machine to determine where weight must be added to make the assembly spin smoothly. Dynamic out-of-balance causes the wheel and tire to whip from side to side and can cause serious steering problems at highway speeds. The whipping motion also causes excessive wear on wheel bearings and suspension parts.

While a wheel can be in static balance and not in dynamic balance, a dynamically balanced wheel will automatically be in static balance. Static balance is a step in the right direction but for a complete job, always insist that dynamic balancing be included.

Should rear wheels be balanced too? Not too many years ago the balance of the rear wheels was considered relatively unimportant. In fact, a tire that had been badly cupped on the front could be put on the rear to even up the wear. However, today's cars with softer and more sensitive rear suspensions (many with coil suspension much like the front suspension) make it imperative that rear wheels be balanced for maximum tire wear and car stability. Since the rear wheels make as many revolutions per mile as the front ones and they're often suspended in similar fashion, it makes sense to treat them the same.

When to balance: If the tires on your car have never been balanced, the sooner you have it done, the better. Be sure nylon cord tires are driven at least five miles to warm them up and eliminate flat spots before they are balanced. Don't wait for a tire to show extreme or unusual wear before balancing, because by that time much of the damage will have been done. When you buy a new tire, have it balanced as soon as possible. Some shops recommend driving the new tire 100-200 miles to be sure it is "set to the wheel" before balancing; others recommend balancing as soon as the tire is installed. Balancing a wheel usually costs about $2 plus weights. It will last for the life of the tire unless the tire has to be removed from the rim for repair of a puncture or other reason. In that event, it should be checked for balance after repairs are made.

Proper balance and alignment pay for themselves by increasing tire life and decreasing wear on vital parts. You also get a bonus in the way your car handles and holds the road. But the real payoff is in your safety.

Make one extravagant decorating gesture and you'll rouse a room out of the ordinary. It could be a magnificent piece of furniture, a daring color scheme, a pattern overstatement, new ideas for old things—or a dramatic fabric splurge as seen in this room.

Let your fabric be boldly patterned—as this paisley is—and don't stop there. Go all the way—walls, ceiling, draperies, and upholstery.

All this magic can be yours for as much—or as little—as you care to spend. You can use an inexpensive patterned cotton or a French toile. Both can be protected with finishes.

Applying fabric to walls is easier today with the many adhesives available. Or, apply the fabric as was done here by stapling it to the walls and concealing the seams with molding strips.

STRIKE UP STRIPES AND STIR UP A ROOM

In this combination den and guest room, the fabric of soft and sharp stripes covers two walls, a sofa bed, and a wall-hanging shelf. This expansive treatment visually stretches the small room.

Out-of-the-ordinary furnishings and accessories are right in tune with the spirited stripes. Glass-topped wicker basket table and tufted velvet pedestal chair are light in scale to play up the power of the bold background.

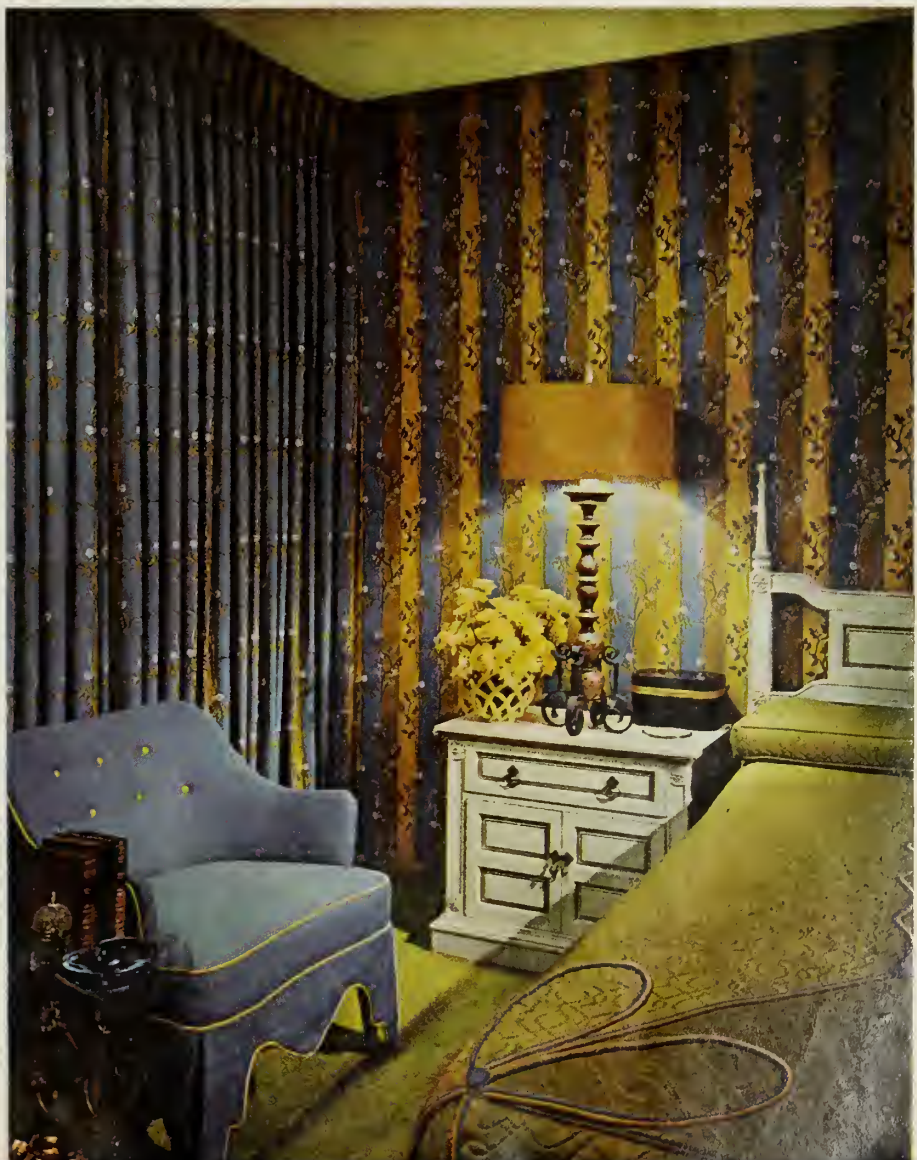

Right above: Another slick optical trick stripes can perform is to define a particular area in a room. In this living room, for example, stripes create an entryway where there wasn't one before. Emphatic black-and-white striped wallpaper was used on the wall adjacent to the front door (the other walls were left white). Furthering the illusion of an entry: a cushion-laden low bench and a tall plant stand overflowing with fern. A wrought-iron carriage lamp and a pleasingly balanced arrangement of varisized pictures add warmth and help turn this improvised foyer into a striking focal point.

Right: Still another fool-the-eye trick with stripes—this one designed to wake up a lackadaisical bedroom. Vibrantly colored stripes, overlaid with a floral pattern, blanket the room—on the walls and at the windows.

But the effect isn't overwhelming because the folds of the draperies give the pattern a completely different, but compatible, look. Furnishings pick up the glowing colors—with white acting as mediator.

DARE TO MIX THE DIFFERENT

Photograph: Lisanti. Interior Designer: Rita St. Clair, A.I.D. Data: Kit Tyson

Left: Contrast the old with the new, the simple with the elegant, the rugged with the delicate—and you can come up with a room as individual as this one. It's amazing how these calculated mix-ups end up looking as though they were meant for each other.

Here, the T-square simplicity of the table contrasts with the curvilinear lines of the chairs, an abstract painting with an antique samovar, a vertical wood panel with the horizontal line of the wooden buffet-chest.

Then there's the contrast of lively colors—reds and oranges played side by side (an idea picked up from the painting). The crystal chandelier and candle holders coolly complement the warm colors.

Right: In this den, the conservative rubs shoulders with the uninhibited, a decorating ploy bound to make a room different and exciting.

Solid green carpeting, black upholstery, and gold casement draperies are foils for the wild fling of overstated paisley wallpaper. There's the contrast of iron and wood furniture, of soft-textured, loosely woven draperies with slick, patent upholstery.

More whimsical mixing—a Mexican straw hassock upturned to hold magazines, a Colonial wood stirring spoon as a container for daisies, and a gaily painted Hitchcock desk chair.

TRY YOUR HAND AT THE STARTLING

Above: Don't be limited by the expected—there's no creative satisfaction in turning out carbon copies. Unique accessories can quickly transform an ordinary room into an extraordinary one. And you can easily switch accessories when you want a change.

Case in point: this bathroom rescued from sameness by surprise details. Strings of colored beads, the kind you find at dime stores, hang from shower curtain rings. The wrought-iron divider is loot from a junkyard. Other unexpected ideas: a Colonial clock, enameled tin cups, and a growing plant in living color.

Right: It isn't every day you find a horse in a living room. When you do, it's a win-place-show attraction. Here, a ceremonial horse from India stirs up conversation. When you're tired of the effect, put the horse to pasture.

A wall-hung shelf replaces the usual end tables—becomes a stage for favorite possessions. Another bright note: the old wrought-iron light fixture.

GO ALL-OUT IN ONE SMALL AREA

Photograph: Lisanti Decorator, Tulane Kidd, A.I.D. Data - June D. Edwards

Right: If you'd like to try out some new and different decorating ideas without burning your bridges behind you, why not start small? With wit, taste, and imagination, you can make a small area yield extra excitement.

This dining area provides happy living with clarion colors, pulsating pattern, and clever contrast. The simply constructed wooden table and mirror frame are painted outdoor colors—sky blues and sun-drenched yellows. A light-hearted patterned floral wallpaper is the backdrop.

Sturdy Mexican chairs with natural rush seats and backs contrast effectively with all the brilliant colors and straight lines. Or, you could use curvy black wrought-iron chairs or tall ladder-backs in natural wood tones.

Right below: Nostalgic furnishings and accessories give this kitchen breakfast nook a cozy, unhurried atmosphere.

The tabletop is a thick, laminated maple chopping block, and the counter work area is covered with a tortoise-shell plastic laminate. Substituting for the usual chairs: a winged love seat upholstered in leather. A sleigh seat or a turn-of-the-century wicker settee would be equally appropriate.

Hand-printed fabric, a period mirror, and quaint accessories contribute to the old-fashioned feeling.

Begin by throwing out the idea that a functional desk must look like a refugee from the office. This polished mahogany drop-leaf table proves the point. For contrast, add a lightly scaled chair like this bamboo one, painted to suit your color scheme. Here, a miscellany of paintings, a woven straw screen, and a Mexican rug put the accent on "home" in this minuscule home office. Every detail, down to the tiniest desk accessory, is a unique expression of personal taste.

USE COLOR AS A CATALYST

Left: Color can make a room sing and zing as fast as anything we know. But to make color work its magic, you must first decide on your specific decorating goal—and then “hue” to it throughout the room.

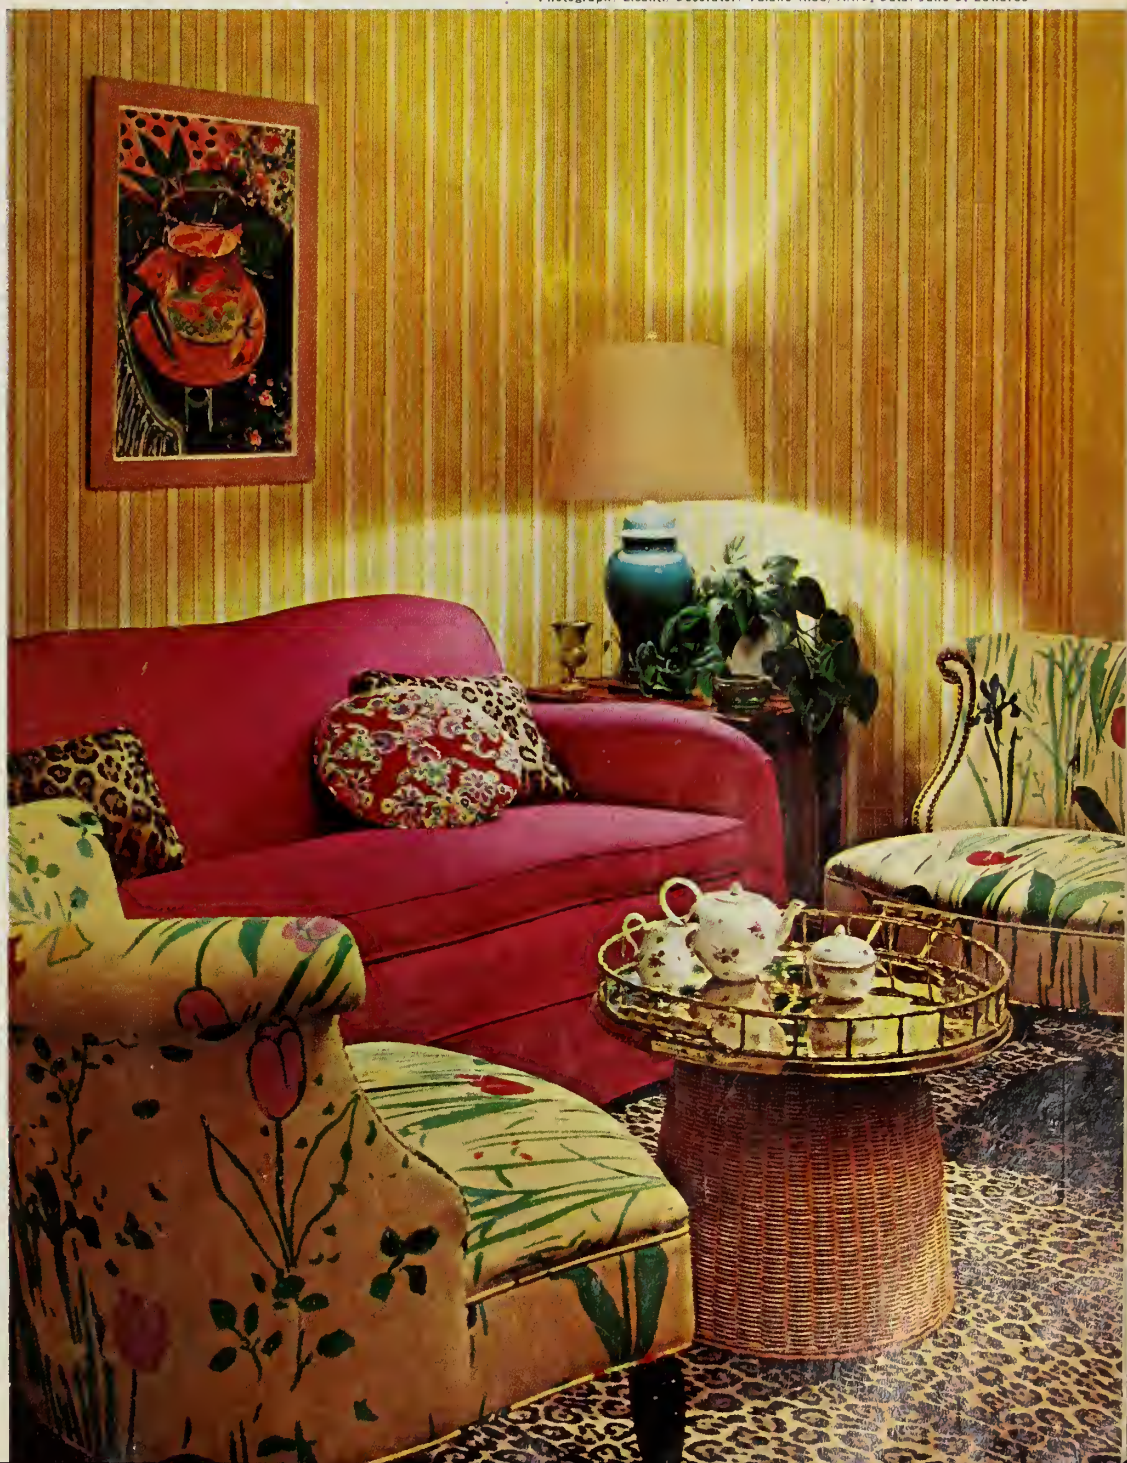

Here the splurge is vibrant red, used unstintingly to create warmth and intimacy in a large, high-ceilinged Victorian room. To draw the room inward, the ceiling is also painted red, and red is repeated in some of the furnishings.

A friendly miscellany of furniture styles and accessories furthers the feeling of coziness, making the room glow with all the radiant warmth of the flickering fire.

Right: It takes know-how and nerve to handle color in a room as challenging as this one. There's pattern—intricate and unusual—everywhere. There's the huge scale of the furniture. Watch how color—vivid and pale—does its job of weaving all these complexities together into a pleasing whole. It works when you keep your major colors in the warm families of red and yellow.

The one big, resounding swack of color—the fuchsia red of the plump sofa—is the tonic which invigorates all the other colors in the room.

To see what we mean, study the plan. Living and sleeping areas are buffered by the basement stairs, master bath, closets and a short hallway. The bedrooms are clustered together, yet none of them shares a wall with another or with the living room—so no one in your family will lose sleep over a late bridge game or the Saturday morning cartoons.

The kitchen is handy to the garage and side entrance, an asset when you're totting grocery bags or garbage. There's a full-fledged family room downstairs; if you want to keep an eye on toddlers, set up a playpen in the eating area.

Overall dimensions are 68x36 feet; total floor space is 2,250 square feet, excluding the garage and decks.

Above: Here's a rare instance of brick and stone working together for a unified appearance. Don't try to combine different materials unless the colors blend as smoothly as these browns and tans—and use a complementary roof color.

Tall windows on the garage make the front seem more open than it really is; actually, there's no direct view of the street except from the recessed entry.

The interior of the garage is finished with gypsum board and a beamed ceiling, so you can use it for parties, or convert it into another room later.

above: In the rear, redwood board-and-batten siding and decking were stained to harmonize with the brick and stone both out front and inside.

The unusual angled deck provides a lot of usable space in just a few square feet. Here's another, more conventionally shaped deck adjacent to the dining room (see plan).

center right: Slate, brick, cove lighting, and natural wood provide warmth and texture in this airy living room.

Furniture was grouped naturally around the fireplace, leaving plenty of space for an affic and a piano or entertainment center in the corner at far left (see plan).

This is the only cathedral ceiling in the house. The ridge beam actually helps support the roof; the others are false. Tongue-and-groove planks were nailed up between the beams.

bottom right: Recessed "skylights"—which are actually fluorescent fixtures and translucent glass—plus a window that looks out on the entry make the kitchen-eating area seem bigger.

A bar-high surface screens all the counter clutter, and you can serve from it in mornings when the alarm doesn't go off. There's a pantry and broom closet behind louvered doors in the background; to their left is the dining room.

PLANT TWO MONTHS OF SPRING COLOR NOW

By Hamilton Mason, Garden Editor, and Russell O'Harra, Associate

You don't have to settle for fleeting dabs of spring color if you choose spring-flowering bulbs whose blossoms span the time from the first thaw to the first peony bloom. Varieties of crocus, hyacinths, tulips, daffodils, iris, and alliums guarantee you this sure-fire spread of color—but remember, you must plant the bulbs this fall. Blooming order can vary according to weather and geographical location.

Photographs: Burgess

VERY EARLY

Iris danfordiae (above left) are surprisingly little members of the iris family that bloom close on the heels of the crocus. While their brilliant canary-yellow flowers are loud for their size, you should mass a dozen or more bulbs to get a good showing—space them three or four inches apart. Scattered patches of these do wonders for a rock garden or border.

Squills, or scillas, (above right) grow quantities of starry blue, white, or rose blossoms in short racemes to subtly announce the arrival of spring. Naturalize these little gems beneath shrubs, in grassy areas, or along the edge of the flower border. If left undisturbed, squills multiply rapidly to give a larger display each year.

The petite flowers shown on this page are priced to match their size. Purchase the bulbs by the hundred, and the cost comes to just five to seven cents each—so you get a big return for your money.

Crocus (at right) are so eager to flash their cheerful blooms, they can't even wait for spring. Often they rush the season by popping up through a late-winter snow. The clear purple, yellow, blue, white, and lilac flowers seem all the brighter since they're the first to break the drabness of winter. Plant these little beauties in clusters to the front of the flower border, or throw handfuls of the bulbs on the lawn and plant them where they light.

EARLY

Daffodils (above left) let you know spring is here for sure with their trumpeted blossoms. Although whites and yellows predominate, touches of red, orange, and green accent the trumpets of many, and others take on a general tone of pink or mauve. Blooms are bigger these days; some reach diameters of four inches. The trumpets take varied shapes. Large-cupped Duke of Windsor is at upper left, small-cupped Verger at upper right, and triandrus Liberty Bells at lower left.

Kaufmanniana tulips (above right) start off the large-flowered tulip season with their flashy near-normal-size flowers held just above their low, spreading foliage. Petals are usually in reds, yellows, and pinks, but some retain a pure, single color. The yellow Fair Lady and watermelon-rose Fritz Kreisler, separated by a planting of puschkinias, demonstrate the effectiveness of massed plantings of the kaufmannianas. Foliage of some hybrids is attractive in itself, with designs formed of maroon veining.

Red Emperor tulips (left) come next with colossal blooms of the most intense red. Possibly the most widely planted of all tulips, they are undoubtedly the biggest, brightest, and showiest. Plants grow to a sturdy 18-inch height and literally bloom their heads off. In fact, a planting of Red Emperors is tantamount to brilliant spring color. If you prefer yellow, plant Golden Emperor.

MIDSEASON

Lily-flowered tulips (above left) present their distinctively shaped blossoms in midseason. The arched, pointed petals form delicate, colorful urns that are as attractive in the garden as in arrangements. The yellow blooms are Golden Duchess; the red, Marigot. Most tulip colors are represented in the many varieties available—some are handsomely two-toned. Grouping a dozen or so bulbs of several varieties will give eye-catching areas of brilliance to light up a flower border.

Double daffodils (above right) lift their tightly petaled heads a little later than most other daffodils for a full quota of midseason color. The doubly frilled crowns of the variety shown are as big and flamboyant as their namesake, Texas. Blend groupings of these in the flower border or along the front of your foundation plantings, and you will enjoy them for years.

Cottage and some botanical tulips (right) delay their blooming for follow-up color after the peak of the early varieties. Dreaming Maid, a cottage tulip with white-rimmed, lilac-mauve cupped petals, is a favorite of all the ladies who see it. Tulipa acuminata, a botanical variety, is a delightfully bright curiosity that blends red and yellow in its long, thin, spidery petals. The botanical tulips offer a wide variety of shapes, sizes, and colors of blooms well worth your investigation.

LATE

Hybrid Dutch iris (above left) have magnificently formed flowers, vying with the orchid for sheer beauty. The color range is wide, too, and includes shades of blue, yellow, white, bronze, gold, purple, lilac, and various two-tone blendings. Group six or more bulbs of each of several varieties for an extended display of blooms. This is also one of the most attractive flowers to work into bouquets or corsages.

Parrot and cottage tulips (above right) signal the end of the tulip season with their big, extravagantly bright flowers. The cottage tulip Fireflame is generous with its red-feathered yellow blooms. Its companion here is the parrot tulip Orange Favourite whose deeply cut and frilled petals give a birdlike appearance. The parrots are unrivaled in the garden and long-lasting when cut.

Darwin tulips and alliums (left) end the season as brilliantly as it began. The long-stemmed Darwins put on a dazzling display of bright, clear blooms in a full range of tulip colors. (Sunkist is shown here.) The alliums are really glorified onions that display their rounded heads of blue, white, or rosy flowers. The variety shown, aflatunense, opens early enough to blend its distinctive blooms with those of the late tulips. When the blossoms fade, cut them off with stems intact and dry for use in winter bouquets. The full, spidery heads are very attractive this way.

EXECUTIVE SUITE FOR A BEDROOM

This handsome study has everything you'd find in an office downtown—plus space for a color TV set—yet it projects into the room just 18 inches. Build it in your master bedroom or family room, or make it the major attraction in a den.

The study is thrifty with floor space because every cubic inch of storage is efficiently tailored.

The typewriter, for instance, flips away on a hinged panel into what would be inaccessible "dead" storage in the corner. There's an electrical outlet down in the well so you don't have to unplug the machine when you flip it.

Narrow drawers left of the chair are compartmented for pencils, scissors, and other oddments; there's a filing cabinet behind the door at lower right; that shallow white cabinet holds paper clips, rubber bands, stamps, and staples.

A good carpenter—either yourself or a professional—can do almost all the work, though you'll need a few hours of an electrician's time for installation of the lights and outlets.

At first glance, it looks as if construction would tie up the room for a long time, but the desk, cabinets, and bookshelves can be built and finished in the shop, then fastened to the wall.

The TV set slides in and out on heavy-duty drawer glides and swivels on a store-bought lazy Susan.

The biggest part of your materials budget will be spent on wood. For enough birch plywood and lumber to build this unit, expect to pay $150 to $200. Add to that the cost of paneling and studs for the short wall, plus hardware and stain.

HOME IMPROVEMENT 1967

EIGHT WAYS TO MAKE YOUR HOUSE LIVE BETTER. EACH COSTS UNDER $500 IN MATERIALS!

Here's home improvement on a budget.

For $500—much less in some cases—you can buy the makings for such amenities as a fireplace, more storage, a bedroom vanity, or second kitchen.

The $500 doesn't include labor charges because you'll want to do some of the work yourself—but for many of these projects you'll need assistance from a plumber, electrician, or some other skilled professional. So pick your project, then pick your man; he'll give you an estimate to round out the bill.

PARTY KITCHEN

Ever had the feeling you missed your own party? Maybe that's because you spent most of it in the kitchen. To join the fun without slighting anyone's appetite, put this compact cooking center in a family room or basement recreation area, near your outdoor living—anywhere you like to do your entertaining.

In eight feet of wall space there's a little refrigerator, an extra-large bar sink, and a hood for exhausting smoke from the charcoal grill.

Later you could add a gas barbecue or two-burner range. Cabinets and drawers put glassware, dishes, and utensils where you'll use them; recessed lighting in the soffit illuminates the counter.

Plans at extreme right show how you could shorten the kitchen to six feet by doing without one set of cabinets and locating the refrigerator below.

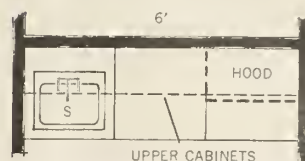

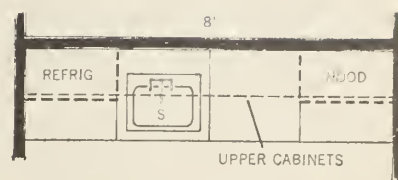

The easy way to get the work done is to call in a kitchen contractor and have him do everything; to economize on labor charges, you could install the cabinets and refrigerator, build the soffit and counter top, and do the painting.

You'll still need a trio of tradesmen to put in the necessary lights and outlets, plumbing, and exhaust system.

Here's how our materials budget breaks down—$100 to $120 for the refrigerator; $250 to $300 for cabinets; about $45 for the hood; $30 for the sink, faucets, and pipes.

Of course, all these prices depend on the qualities and styles you choose, as well as on the number of cabinets needed.

These cabinets have hardboard inserts in the doors. The inserts can be painted to match the walls and changed anytime you'd like a different look.

A WALL FULL OF COLOR AND STORAGE

Look at what this bold built-in does for an informal family area—or you could put it right in the living room. Big cabinets and deep shelves hold everything—trophies, turntables, even a refreshment bar that's the lifeline of parties.

The bar (left) has its own lighting and sink, plus space below for bottles or a compact refrigerator. Next to it are cabinets that your expanding entertainment center and record or tape collection will never outgrow.

The tall niche shows off your most cherished trophy, piece of sculpture, or antique; or put an ultraviolet bulb in the spotlight above and you could use the niche as a place to grow a small tree.

The hi-fi speakers (left and right) hang on adjustable metal support strips so you can move them around for just the right stereo effect.

Except for installation of the sink and lights, this is an easy enough do-it-yourself job. If you're just a beginner, don't be afraid to attempt it—everything goes together with nails or screws, glue, and easy-to-handle butt joints.

Nail together panels of $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood for the thick uprights, then toenail them to the ceiling and floor. Be sure everything is plumb so your doors will hang right.

Brace the uprights with double-thickness base shelves; all other shelves hang on adjustable strips.

Hang the doors, trim the top and bottom with molding, and you're ready for the fun—that exciting paint job. Plywood—your biggest materials expense—will cost about $100.

COMPACT VANITY— DRAWERS GALORE

Here's how to turn a small bedroom into a master suite. The lavatory offers a way to buck the line outside your family bath; seven big drawers and a cabinet make space in the room by substituting for freestanding furniture.

The plan at lower left shows how you can fit the lavatory and storage into a standard closet; choose one that backs up to a bathroom wall so the plumber can hook your sink into existing pipes.

Replace the old closet with a new one along another wall. You can build the lavatory-storage unit and a new closet for less than $500 in materials.

The vanity has recessed ceiling lighting, a three-way mirror, and tough imitation marble around the basin. Underneath is a big cabinet and five drawers. Bifold doors close off that part of the unit when it's not in use.

Other than plumbing and electrical installations, all the work is carpentry. With skill and patience, you could do it all yourself. If you're short on either, have a carpenter do the hard parts.

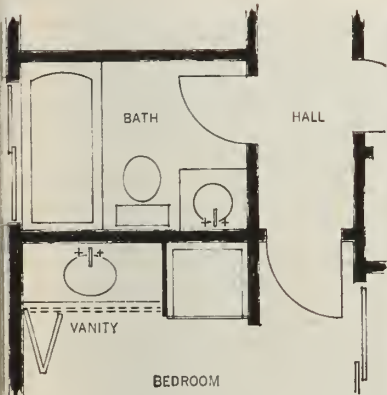

To save time on the finishing, use medium-density-overlay exterior plywood for the doors, drawer fronts, and other exposed areas. It has a smooth surface that doesn't need to be sanded or sealed.

Plywood will probably be the biggest item on your materials bill—expect to pay about $150 for seven or eight sheets of medium-density-overlay.

You could save money by using fir plywood, but filling, sanding, and sealing will about double your construction time. The lavatory, including the laminated plastic vanity top, will cost $40 to $70.

HOME OFFICE FOR TWO

And it doesn't matter whether it's used by a busy husband-wife team or a pair of home-working children. Build the office at one end of a family room or along a wall in the kids' bedroom.

Each desk has two tiers of drawers, its own lighting, and long shelves above for magazines or reference books. Electric outlets on each side supply current for an electric typewriter, slide projector, or dictating machine.

Between the desks (see the elevation at left) are a built-in safe, filing cabinets, and shelves for a radio, TV set, hi-fi, or bulky income tax records.

Of course you can modify or adapt our design any way you like. In a children's room, that center unit could be an auxiliary closet; if you need only one desk, simply eliminate the other, or use the space for more storage.

You could have a carpenter do the framing and rough cabinetry, then apply the paneling, laminated plastic desk tops, and finishing yourself.

You'll also need to call in an electrician for installation of the lights, switches, and outlets.

All the structural parts are inexpensive fir plywood and dimension lumber, so paneling will be your most expensive material. It's also the most variable in cost, depending on the wood you choose and the size of the unit.

This one, which is 12x8x2 feet deep, required eight sheets—not counting the board-and-batten treatment above. Four-by-eight-foot sheets of quarter-inch walnut paneling cost from $10 to $25 each; most other woods are less.

EARLY-BIRD POTTING SHED

Gardening is more fun when you can rush the season a bit—and here's just the place to get a good head start. The weather-resistant aluminum lean-to is 13 feet square and eight feet high.

The plan at far right shows how you could build it at the rear of almost any house. If neither of these places is handy, attach the potting shed to your garage.

You can also hook it on at the rear entry for a child-proof mud room, or convert it into an airy, screened patio.

A floor of river gravel and precast concrete steppingstones shrugs off dirt and water; lath-and-screen sides let in breezes and sunlight, discourage pests.

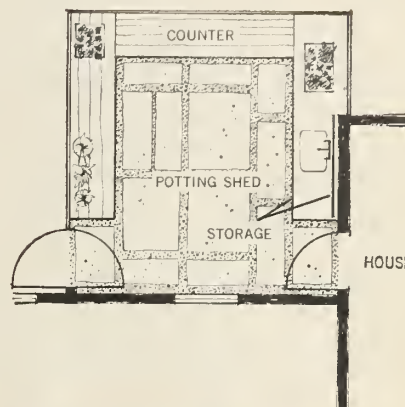

There's a cold-water sink and convenient storage for pots and fertilizers in the redwood cabinet; a waist-high counter and plank shelves put plants up within easy reach of your green thumb.

Aluminum is lightweight and easy to cut with a hacksaw or power saw, so you could do all the structural work yourself if you wish—or hire a company that fabricates aluminum patio covers to put up the basic framing.

The vertical supports are 3x2-inch aluminum posts with channels into which one-inch redwood slats have been riveted; the rafters are 2x2-inch tubular aluminum beams, fastened to 2x2 crosspieces with sheet metal screws.

Sheets of perforated aluminum were riveted to the rafters, and screening was tacked to the redwood slats.

Figure on spending about $100 for the aluminum. Buy an inexpensive sink and just hook it up to your outside water faucet with a rubber hose.

ENTRY DIVIDER— EXTRA DIVIDENDS

Among them—storage for coats and card tables, a mirror, landing counter, drop-down desk, and space for a TV set, hi-fi components, and file drawers.

All this fits into a handsome, easy-to-build package that's only two feet wide and just a little over eight feet long.

The closet and landing counter (below left) create a private, convenient entry area for an ordinary front door.

On the living room side (below right), the desk makes a handy place to write notes and pay bills, which you can keep in cabinets above. Drawers below hold files and phonograph records. Card tables and chairs slip into that tall cabinet at the end of the divider.

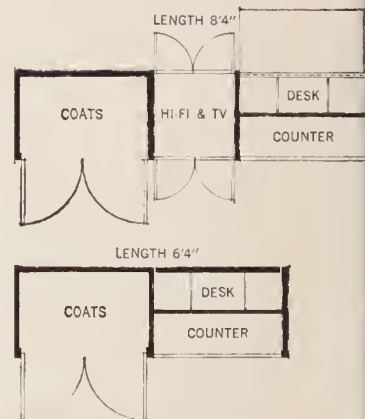

If you don't have space for an eight-foot-long unit, you can shorten this one by leaving out the center section, as shown in the lower plan at right.

The divider goes together with plywood and pine moldings, so you can construct it all yourself or hire a cabinet maker for the difficult parts.

You'll need about ten sheets of $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch fir plywood, which costs about \$8 for a four-by-eight-foot sheet. The moldings look complicated, but you can build them up with standard millwork.

If you'd prefer a contemporary appearance, leave out the moldings and substitute birch plywood, then treat everything with walnut stain. Good-quality birch plywood costs about $17 a sheet.

Other than the cost of plywood and moldings, your major materials expenses will be for the mirror, hardware, and light fixtures, plus paint and glaze for the antiqued finish.

THAT FIREPLACE YOU'VE ALWAYS WANTED

The ingredients for it, along with those for the tile hearth and unusual wall treatment, come pretty close to the top of our $500-for-materials budget, but they don't exceed it.

The secret is to buy an insulated, prefabricated fireplace, one that doesn't need an expensive concrete footing. This one has a metal and brick firebox that can be recessed into a wall-to-wall, bench-like hearth, as shown in the sectional drawing at far right.

The front of the fireplace is faced with plywood—it could be gypsum board—which was painted slate gray. Here again, the unit's insulated design makes it possible to use any material you like.

To tie the fireplace into the room and make everything seem wider, new two-tone elm paneling was nailed up horizontally instead of vertically.

The fireplace itself will cost $300 to $350, plus installation. That cost includes enough chimney sections to get through the roof of a one-story house; if yours is a two-story, figure on paying a little more for the chimney and for installation.

Before the installer arrives, build the hearth with a framework of 2x10s, covered with $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood. Be sure to leave an opening for the recessed firebox.

To hang the hearth, nail cleats to the wall studs on either side and in back, then lift the platform into place and screw or nail it to the cleats.

After the fireplace is in, frame around it with 2x4s, then put up the facing and paneling. Lay the tile, put up the shelf over the log bin, and you're ready for some cozy winter evenings.

Continued

THE PACESETTER—GOLDEN ORANGE CHICKEN

Choose your main course first—it sets the pace for the rest of the meal. Here we feature Golden Orange Chicken, a delicately citrus-flavored entrée.

When serving chicken, purchase about one-half pound per person. If family preferences for white or dark meat vary, chicken parts are an ideal choice. Plan to purchase extra chicken breasts to oven-poach while your Sunday chicken bakes. Then use in a casserole later in the week. If you choose whole broiler-fryers to cut up and bake, set aside the necks, backs, and wings—and simmer for flavorful chicken broth to use in soups or casseroles.

Golden Orange Chicken: There's little cleanup involved when you start the chicken coating this way! First dry 6 slices of bread in a very slow oven (225°) for about an hour. (Timing tip: dry the bread while your garlic croutons—one of the vegetable toppers—crisp.)

Place 3 slices of the dried bread in two clear plastic bags. With a rolling pin, crush finely. Transfer to a one-cup measure. Repeat with the remaining 3 slices bread.

In a shallow dish, combine the dried bread crumbs (about 1 cup) with 1 teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon shredded orange peel; set aside. In a second shallow dish, beat 2 eggs with a fork till blended. Stir in $\frac{1}{3}$ cup orange juice.

For six servings, you'll need 3 to 4 pounds chicken parts (legs, thighs, and breasts, as desired), or two 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ - to 3-pound broiler-fryers, cut up. (To store uncooked, fresh chicken, wrap loosely in clear plastic wrap or foil and store in the coldest part of your refrigerator until ready to use. Uncooked chicken will keep well for one to two days.)

Using kitchen tongs, dip each chicken part first into the orange juice-egg mixture, turning to coat all sides. Then, dip each part in the bread crumb mixture, coating well. Place chicken parts on rack to dry slightly. (Paper toweling under the rack helps avoid unnecessary cleanup.)

Meanwhile, in hot oven (400°), melt 6 tablespoons butter or margarine in a 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ x10 $\frac{1}{2}$ x1-inch baking pan. Remove pan from oven and arrange coated chicken parts in the pan, with like parts together. Using kitchen tongs, turn and coat each part with melted butter; place skin side down. Bake chicken in 400° oven for 30 minutes. Using kitchen tongs, turn chicken and bake 30 minutes more. If chicken becomes too brown, cover loosely with foil the last 10 minutes of baking.

At serving time, arrange chicken, like parts together, on platter; garnish with fluffs of watercress and wedges of golden orange to squeeze over each serving.

(Timing tip: assuming bread crumbs for the coating are prepared ahead, plan on 15 to 20 minutes preparation time, 60 minutes baking time.)

Creamy Potato Bake is off to a head start with instant mashed potatoes and a carton of whipped cream cheese. It bakes to golden goodness in only 30 minutes!

Prepare instant mashed potatoes—enough for 6 servings—according to package directions, omitting the butter or margarine. Add one 4-ounce carton whipped cream cheese; beat well. Stir in 1 beaten egg, 2 tablespoons finely chopped green onion, and 1 tablespoon finely snipped parsley; blend thoroughly. Transfer to a well-greased 1-quart baking dish or soufflé dish. Dot with 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Sprinkle lightly with paprika. Bake in hot oven (400°) for 30 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

(Timing tip: Place Creamy Potato Bake in oven when you turn the chicken. Another time, bake in individual ramekins.)

The smart cook plans for leftovers! For example, poach those extra chicken parts to use in a casserole later in the week. It's thrifty and timesaving, too.

To poach chicken: Select 3 or 4 meaty parts. Place in baking dish and season with a little salt and pepper. Add $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chicken broth or 1 teaspoon chicken-flavored gravy base mixed with $\frac{1}{2}$ cup hot water. For additional flavor, add $\frac{1}{4}$ cup chopped celery or green onion.

Bake, covered, in hot oven (400°) for 1 hour, or till chicken is tender. Cool chicken in the broth, then refrigerate in tightly covered container. Use within two to three days in your family's favorite chicken casserole or sandwich.

(Timing tip: Place the casserole of chicken in the oven to poach before you begin preparing the Golden Orange Chicken. Remove from oven to cool when Little Dinner Loaves are added.)

Oven recipes like these always work in your favor. They require little watching, so you can turn your attention elsewhere. For best heat circulation when your oven is a bit crowded, stagger arrangement of baking pans as in the above picture.

THE COMPLEMENTERS—VERSATILE VEGETABLES

Be creative with vegetables—they can be the most exciting element of your meal! Serve a brand-new vegetable now and then . . . fix an old favorite in a new way . . . or serve two or three vegetables at one meal. With the many fresh, frozen, and canned vegetables available year-round, you should include a wide variety in your meal plan each week.

Clean all fresh vegetables as soon as possible after you bring them home. Some vegetables, such as the green beans we feature here, may be rinsed and trimmed—ready for the saucepan—then refrigerated in clear plastic bags for use later. This simple step makes it easy on the cook when dinnertime approaches.

It's easy to learn the secrets of vegetable cookery. Use a small amount of water and cook vegetables till just tender. Vegetables cooked correctly add color, flavor, and texture to a meal, and provide some essentials of a well-balanced diet.

Be imaginative with salads, too. Add chilled cooked vegetables, sliced raw mushrooms, or zucchini to a tossed salad. Serve a new vegetable or fruit mold, or a frozen fruit salad. The possibilities are as endless as your ingenuity!

To care for salad greens, rinse with cold water; drain on paper toweling till thoroughly dry, then refrigerate greens in clear plastic bags or plastic wrap. To keep watercress and parsley fresh, store in a tightly covered container.

Tomato Slices with Dill Cucumber Marinade

—it's tossed salad with a new twist! Slices of juicy tomato nestle on a bed of deep green Bibb lettuce, sport a cool, crisp marinated cucumber dressing. A happy addition to this harvest meal.

Pour $\frac{1}{3}$ cup salad oil into measuring cup; add 3 tablespoons vinegar, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon each dried dillweed and salt, $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon sugar, and $\frac{1}{8}$ teaspoon pepper. Blend with a wire whip. Use a vegetable parer to slice 1 large cucumber paper-thin into shallow dish. Add marinade; chill 6 hours or overnight. Before serving, slice 3 tomatoes; arrange on platter or 6 salad plates atop Bibb lettuce leaves. Spoon on the cucumbers and marinade.

Garlic Croutons, Crisp Bacon Bits, and Shredded Cheddar give vegetables a "dressed-up" look with very little work.

For Garlic Croutons: Cut 4 to 5 slices bread into cubes to measure 3 cups. In oven-proof skillet, melt 3 tablespoons butter or margarine; stir in $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon garlic salt. Add bread cubes; toss to coat. Place in a very slow oven (225°) about 2 hours or until croutons are quite dry and crisp. Refrigerate in a tightly covered container till needed.

Serve croutons, bacon bits, and shredded cheddar cheese in small dishes as toppers for hot cooked beans and squash. Save any remaining toppers to toss into a big green salad.

(Timing tips: plan to make croutons a day ahead . . . cook 6 to 8 extra slices of bacon at breakfast time . . . buy the packaged shredded cheddar cheese.)

Buy 1 pound fresh Green Beans for 6 servings. Bring a small amount of salted water to boiling; add whole beans. Quickly return to boiling. Cover; reduce heat. Cook gently till tender, about 20 minutes. (Beans should still have a slight "snap.") Drain excess liquid. Dot with butter or margarine before serving.

If using frozen green beans, cook them from frozen state, according to package directions. Set a timer here!

For canned green beans: Drain liquid from can into saucepan. Bring to boiling and cook till about $\frac{1}{3}$ of the original quantity. Add vegetables; heat through.

Sliced Yellow Squash—Here's how to bring out the best in this seasonal favorite. First, choose small, young squash that are heavy for their size; the rind should yield easily to thumbnail pressure.

Slice 1 pound yellow summer squash crosswise into slices $\frac{1}{4}$ inch thick. In skillet, melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add squash; cover tightly and cook over low heat till tender, about 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Six servings.

Present these vegetables piping hot in matching serving dishes or a divided vegetable container. Pass assorted toppers at the table so everyone can choose a favorite. (Try shredded cheddar atop the potato bake, too.) For toppers another day, use sliced water chestnuts, sautéed celery, or butter-toasted walnut halves. Continued

THE GLAMOROUS FINALE—BUTTER PECAN ICE CREAM MOLD

Bring on a spectacular such as this and the compliments won't stop! Light and delicious, Butter Pecan Ice Cream Mold with Peach Sauce proves a perfect ending for this meal. It's designed with the cook in mind—you can make both the ice cream mold and sauce a day ahead. Then, garnish with fresh peach slices and dessert topping just before serving. A waistline watcher joining you for dinner? Simply serve him sliced fresh peaches.

Butter Pecan Ice Cream Mold: In a small saucepan, soften 1 envelope (1 tablespoon) unflavored gelatin in $\frac{3}{4}$ cup water. Cook and stir just till gelatin dissolves; cool. Add $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped pecans and 2 teaspoons rum flavoring. Chill till partially set. (Placing the saucepan of gelatin mixture in a bowl of ice water will hasten the setting process—but watch carefully. If gelatin mixture becomes too firm, re-heat just till melted; chill again till partially set.)

Using a wooden spoon, soften 1 quart butter pecan ice cream in mixing bowl. (Do not let ice cream melt.) Stir in the partially set gelatin mixture, blending thoroughly. Arrange pecan halves in bottom of a 4-cup mold; spoon in ice cream mixture. Freeze firm, 6 hours or overnight.

This show-stopping dessert works with other ice creams, too. Try maple nut . . . peach . . . fudge ripple . . . coffee . . . or a combo of two ice creams.

Peach Sauce: Using a rubber spatula, stir 1 12-ounce can ($1\frac{1}{2}$ cups) peach nectar into 1 tablespoon cornstarch in small saucepan. Add $\frac{1}{4}$ cup light corn syrup. Cook and stir over medium heat till boiling; cook 2 minutes more. Stir in 1 tablespoon butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, and a dash of mace; cool, then cover and refrigerate. At serving time, stir in 1 cup coarsely chopped fresh peaches. Makes $2\frac{1}{2}$ cups sauce.

Before serving dinner, unmold the Butter Pecan Ice Cream Mold: quickly dip mold into a bowl of warm water and invert onto serving plate. Then return it to freezer till dessert time.

This light, refreshing ice cream dessert is a just-right finish for the hearty chicken dinner. Again, it's evidence of the careful planning you saw demonstrated all through the meal. For example, we chose the creamy potato casserole to provide interesting texture contrast to the crisp-coated chicken. Next came the perky tomato salad with its change-of-pace flavor; then for complementary colors and shapes, the green and gold vegetables.

Of course, no dinner is complete without a hot bread! Today, that can be the easiest part of your meal. These Little Dinner Loaves prove the point. Just prepare 1 package refrigerated butter-layered dinner loaves according to package directions. (These require 15 to 18 minutes baking time. If you are baking dinner loaves along with the chicken and the potato casserole, bake in a 10x6x1½-inch baking pan. Or, bake the loaves ahead, then wrap in foil and re-warm in oven just before serving.) Makes 2 loaves.

Steaming cups of freshly brewed coffee are a must with dessert. Have your coffee maker filled and ready to plug in as the family sits down to dinner.

When the main course is finished, recruit a helper to clear the table while you turn your attention to the finishing touches on the dessert. Garnish the ice cream mold with decorative swirls of fluffy dessert topping, and sliced fresh peaches. It's elegant (and easy) to serve this dessert right at the table, along with the freshly brewed after-dinner coffee.

PLAN DINNER BY THE WEEK

Stretch the food budget—and your time—by planning a week's meals all at once. This way you'll make best use of leftovers and you'll be sure your family's diet is well-balanced. Keep these food groups in mind as you jot down menus:

1. Milk: Every family member needs some milk every day—three or more glasses for children, four for teen-agers, at least two for adults. Cheese, ice cream, and other dairy foods can supply part of this daily requirement.
2. Meat: This group includes meat, fish, poultry, and eggs. Dry beans or peas and nuts, also rich in protein, are alternates here. Plan two or more servings per person per day.
3. Vegetables and Fruits: Choose at least four items from this group daily. Make sure one is a vitamin-C-rich food (citrus fruits, tomatoes). Include a dark green or deep yellow vegetable at least every other day.
4. Breads and Cereals: Serve these foods four times a day. Servings can be bread, rolls, crackers, noodles, spaghetti, macaroni, rice, ready-to-eat or cooked cereals.

Be flexible with meals plans. If Dad phones to say he's taking the family out tonight, don't wail, "You can't—I've already thawed the lamb chops!" And keep a few quick tricks in mind to give a company flair to family meals should there be an unexpected guest.

In the following column of menus you'll note that we've planned meals according to the basic food groups, including in-season foods. Plan for leftovers, too. It's easy and smart to cook extra chicken on Sunday for Tuesday's casserole.

THINK MINT!

Make the most of fresh mint—it's refreshing, fragrant, and versatile. Let it enhance the flavor of a cool punch, add a wonderful aroma to hot tea, accent the freshness of garden peas, or gayly garnish a fruit cup.

You'll find more than 40 varieties to choose from. Spearmint and peppermint are the best-known family members, but try the orange-, apple-, and pineapple-scented mints, too. Enjoy the freshness of mint now, then dry or freeze the leaves for use later.

Start with the ideas below. And be sure to try our Apple-Mint Jelly—a must when serving lamb.

Combine finely snipped mint, a little butter or margarine, and grated lemon peel. Stir into hot cooked peas.

Sprinkle glazed carrots or boiled new potatoes with finely snipped mint.

Stir finely snipped mint into dairy sour cream, then serve as a topper for fresh strawberries or a compote of berries and pineapple. Garnish with a sprig of fresh mint.

Make a fruit cup of assorted melon balls; add ginger ale, then sprinkle with snipped mint and shredded orange peel. Chill before serving.

Frost mint leaves by first dipping them in a slightly beaten egg white-water mixture, then sprinkle with granulated sugar; shake lightly and place on a rack to dry. Use to garnish iced drinks, or a salad plate.

Add snipped mint leaves to lemonade, limeade, or other fruit drinks; let stand 30 minutes. To serve, strain; add a fresh sprig of mint to garnish.

Add to hot tea as it steeps, then strain before serving.

HOW TO BE A SUPER MARKETER

Take a good look at your grocery shopping habits. Are you an impulse buyer? . . . do you find yourself at the market every other day? . . . do you constantly overstep your food budget? If you have to answer

"yes" to any of these questions, it may be reassuring to know you have lots of company. Even the most sensible shopper can be swept off her feet by the modern supermarket's dazzling array of products. Here are some suggestions to make you a sharper, thriftier shopper.

You'll be money and time ahead if you guide your marketing by a shopping list. It inhibits impulse buying; helps avoid last-minute shopping trips. Start, of course, with a weekly meal plan. To help make menu decisions, check newspaper ads for money-saving specials. Keep your meal plan flexible in case you see other good buys at the market.

Follow your menus as the basis for a shopping list. Check the recipes you've selected:

do you have all ingredients; are you short any staples?

As an additional shopping aid, post a list of foods you consider staples inside a cupboard door. Then, use as a reminder when making each shopping list. To speed checking foods on hand, group like cans and packages on kitchen shelves. Keep a chalk board or paper and pencil in the kitchen to jot down items as needed.

As you write a shopping list, keep similar items together. List groups in order according to the arrangement of your market. This eliminates backtracking while shopping and helps you remember everything on the list.

As a sample shopping list, here are foods needed for the Sunday dinner on page 76.

Dairy Products; Refrigerated Case:

1 4-ounce carton whipped cream cheese
Sharp natural cheddar cheese
1 package refrigerated butter-layered dinner loaves
1 quart butter pecan ice cream

Meat Case:

3 to 4 pounds chicken parts or 2 2 1/2- to 3-pound broiler-fryers
Bacon

Packaged and Canned Goods:

Instant mashed potatoes
Pecan halves
Dessert topping mix
1 12-ounce can peach nectar

Fresh Fruits and Vegetables:

Oranges 1 lemon
Fresh peaches
1 pound yellow summer squash
1 pound fresh green beans
3 medium tomatoes

1 large cucumber Parsley
Bibb lettuce Green onions
Watercress (optional)

Check these for food on hand—add to above list, if needed:

Bread Milk
Butter or margarine
Eggs Coffee Sugar
Cornstarch
Light corn syrup
Unflavored gelatin
Vinegar Salad oil
Salt and pepper
Garlic salt

Paprika Dried dillweed
Mace Rum flavoring

Become acquainted with your supermarket. Ask the store manager when fresh produce is delivered. If possible, shop at that time for best quality and selection. Shop when you have plenty of time, avoiding the store's busiest hours. A relaxed frame of mind helps you shop more efficiently.

Develop marketing know-how. Remember, you can often save by purchasing a large rather than small can or package of a food you use frequently. Check the labels of these foods and compare cost per ounce. Sale items are good buys, too—if these are products you know you can use. But remember, food is only a bargain if it fits your needs!

Learn how many servings you can expect from a pound of meat, a pound of fresh vegetables, etc. Buying as close as possible to the amount needed avoids waste and saves money. Become familiar with the different grades of food and choose the one that best suits your purpose—it need not always be the most expensive.

Consider your dietary needs, family likes and dislikes, your own time schedule, and storage facilities, as well as the cost of food you purchase. Keeping these in mind will simplify both planning and shopping. And, best of all, you will know exactly where your food dollars go!

CHINESE CABBAGE IS SOMETHING ELSE!

Photographs: Olsen

You may know this versatile vegetable as celery cabbage but it's neither celery nor cabbage. It's actually a member of the mustard family. The flavor is cabbage-like but more delicate—mild and sweet. Like celery, Chinese cabbage grows in long slender heads, white to pale yellow-green in color. You'll love the crispness of finely sliced Chinese cabbage in a tossed salad. Or, shred it for slaw, adding cucumber to the dressing. It's equally tasty as a cooked vegetable—buttered or creamed.

ZINNIAS— FORMAL AND INFORMAL

zinnias strictly country sins? Rustic and suited only the cottage look? No indeed!
All these four arrangements prove it. New varieties—in the small button-type to tousel-headed Mexican bom—allow the arranger a wide scope in size as well as and colors. For both formal and informal groupings, try masses of solid colors accented with one contrasting hue.

For effective zinnia arrangements, follow these few simple rules. Use the brilliant coloration of these flowers to best advantage—try massing them boldly rather than interspers-ing three or four shades in random array. Zinnias can stand on their own—with the simple addition of transitional greens, blue, or Queen Anne's lace. But when they're mixed with other summer flowers, the effect is more rustic than tastefully rich.

uses the shaggy type zinnia in-terpersed with a few button varieties. Remember to remove all foliage below the waterline, or it will wilt and decay.

Elegant French parterre group-
footed comport combines bold, big zinnias with stripes of varie-gated euonymus running vertically from the peak of the arrangement.

A windblown opulence of zinnias (left) loosely arranged in a low, lacquered basket follows the classical Oriental triangular shape but still manages a graceful informality. The latter quality is due to flowers placed in opposition on the left-hand side. Zinnia foliage is not always attractive—so strip off some leaves above the waterline, too. If more are needed, pick out additional leaves, and add at the base.

Slender, symmetrical composition (right) brings together still more zinnias—this time in a traditional high vase. Arrangement features one center-of-interest bloom (with two inches of stem visible) at the apex of the triangle. Other flowers are then massed below with one magnificent zinnia at right forming the low line. If flower heads break, quick and invisible repairs can be effected by putting a tooth-pick through the center of the bloom straight down into stem.

PERFECT PICKLES

Buying Guide, page 112

Add a refreshing accent to your meals with crisp homemade pickles! You'll find the Ps and Qs of successful pickling below—along with some of the best recipes we know.

Start with high-quality ingredients. Use vegetables and fruit as soon as possible after they come from the garden. Choose unwaxed cucumbers when pickling them whole, so brine can penetrate. Pure granulated salt gives the best results. If not available, substitute un-iodized table salt. Acidity of vinegar should be 4 to 6 percent (40 to 60 grains). Check the label for acetic acid content.

The jars and lids are important—use only the ones made especially for canning, not those from commercially canned foods. Be sure canning jars and lids have no cracks, chips, dents, or rust which might prevent an airtight seal. Follow manufacturer's directions for sealing.

Process pickles in a boiling water bath. It helps to maintain color and flavor and to prevent spoilage. Choose a pan deep enough to allow 1 to 2 inches of water above tops of jars plus a little extra space for boiling. Pan should have a close fitting cover and a wire rack to keep jars from touching each other or the sides of the pan. After jars are filled and lids adjusted, immerse them in hot water. Cover pan tightly, bring water quickly back to boiling. Follow recipe direction for timing. Cool pickles 12 to 24 hours, right side up, on a wire rack. Allow room between jars so air can circulate.

Dill Pickles

Wash 3- to 4-inch unwaxed cucumbers well, rubbing with a brush; pack loosely in hot, sterilized quart jars. Add 3 or 4 sprigs fresh dill and 1 teaspoon mustard seed to each jar. Make brine by combining 2 cups water, 1 cup cider vinegar, and 1 tablespoon coarse-medium salt for each quart; bring to boiling. Fill jars to within $\frac{1}{2}$ inch of top. Adjust lids. Process in boiling water bath for 20 minutes. (Start timing as soon as jars are placed in water.)

Watermelon Pickles

7 cups trimmed and cubed watermelon rind*
 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup coarse-medium salt
 4 cups water
 2 cups sugar
 1 cup white vinegar
 1 cup water
 1 tablespoon crushed stick cinnamon
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons whole cloves
 $\frac{1}{2}$ lemon, thinly sliced
 5 maraschino cherries, halved
 *Trim dark green and pink parts from rind; cut rind in 1-inch cubes.

Soak watermelon rind overnight in a solution of the salt and the 4 cups water; if necessary, add more water to cover. Drain and rinse rind. Place in saucepan; cover with cold water. Cook just till rind is tender. Meanwhile, combine sugar, vinegar, the 1 cup water, the cinnamon, and cloves. Simmer 10 minutes; strain. Drain watermelon rind; add to the vinegar mixture along with lemon and cherries. Simmer till rind is transparent. Fill hot sterilized jars to within $\frac{1}{2}$ inch of top; adjust lids. Process in boiling water bath for 5 minutes (Start timing when water returns to boiling.) Makes about 2 pints.

Crisp Pickle Slices

4 quarts thinly sliced unpared cucumbers (about $4\frac{1}{4}$ pounds)
 6 onions, thinly sliced (about 6 cups)
 2 green peppers, thinly sliced (about $1\frac{2}{3}$ cups)
 3 cloves garlic
 $\frac{1}{3}$ cup coarse-medium salt
 5 cups sugar
 3 cups cider vinegar
 2 tablespoons mustard seed
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons turmeric
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons celery seed
 Combine cucumber, onion, green pepper, and garlic. Add salt; cover with cracked ice and mix thoroughly. Let stand 3 hours. Drain well; remove garlic. Combine sugar, vinegar, mustard seed, turmeric, and celery seed; pour over cucumber mixture. Heat just to boiling. Fill hot sterilized jars to within $\frac{1}{2}$ inch of top; adjust lids. Process in boiling water bath for 5 minutes. (Start timing when water returns to boiling.) Makes 8 pints.

PLANNING TO BUY AN ORGAN?

Don't let the many-keyboarded organ scare you! Actually the organ is much easier to master than you'd think—and it's an excellent way to give the whole family both a good music foundation and a lot of fun. If you're in a quandary about what type of organ will best suit your needs, read our tips before you start to shop.

Spinets are currently the big seller in the organ market. They have two keyboards but they're actually easier to play than the old one-keyboard model, despite appearances. Keyboards are staggered, too, to permit easier two-handed playing. The most popular spinets by far are those with 44 keys per keyboard (the top keyboard provides melody, the bottom provides accompaniment). The 44-note keyboard is preferred probably because it can handle all kinds of music, while the 36- and key manuals are more limited. Spinets be fitted with push-button chord device making a two-in-one organ to satisfy individual preferences within a family.

Something new in spinets in the two years is the horseshoe arrangement of the keyboards, much like the old church and theater organs. Horseshoe keyboards are just as easy to play—but you'll pay more for this model, due in part to the change in cabinet design and because of the added theatrical effect. It is the theatrical sound that has made these models so much in demand. Spinets have 13 pedals, which allow you to play a full C to C octave, including "black" notes.

Console organs feature another full octave on the foot pedals, numbering 25 and keys on each keyboard. The melody board is located directly above the accompaniment keyboard, as it isn't feasible to stagger the longer manuals; nevertheless, you'll find that playing is not hindered the least. Horseshoe models were introduced about seven years ago.

The concert organ has 61-note keyboards too, but seven more pedal notes than console. And the concert is actually easier to play. Both the console and concert models also come with third keyboards though these are usually produced for the institutional market and for use by professional musicians.

Price range is broad enough to accommodate most any family budget. Here's a basic chart showing the organ features we've discussed and the comparative prices.

Basic model	Keyboards	Keys per keyboard	Keys per Pedal notes	Cost range
Small spinet	2	36-37	13	$100-$150
Spinet	2	42-49	13	$150-$250
Console	2 or 3	61	25	$250-$1,000
Concert	2 or 3	61	32	$2,000-$5,000

The combo organ is a bright and sprightly newcomer to the field of organs. As the name implies, it is especially tailored to the younger generation of combo-musicians. Versatile and compact, it's an ideal instrument for recreation rooms. Most combo organs are portables—so at last you can take your organ music with you! Combo organs have one or two keyboards, weigh from 35 to 70 pounds, and cost from $100 to $1,000. If you want a traditional look, best consider other types, as these organs are "super-modernistic" in style.

PLANNING TO BUY AN ORGAN?

tication of organ voices and orchestral effects that let you create so many marvelous and exotic sounds. If you wish, you can play Bach's organ music or switch to the full orchestral effect and become a Henry Mancini in your own home. Someone in an adjoining room would swear on a stack of sheet music that you were playing the guitar or flute, if you wanted to create those special sounds.

At the low end of the spinet line, you'll find from four to six instrument voices, such as violin, trumpet, flute, and several others. At the low end of the console line, there are 12 to 13 different voices. At the top of the concert line, there are 15 to 16 voices. You can play each effect in multiple octaves if you wish. In the concert line, it is possible to play a violin note in seven to nine octaves, depending on the model.

The percussion effect is now standard equipment on virtually all home organs. Not long ago it was among the optionals. Manufacturers include in the percussion category the reproduced sounds of tunable instruments played by either plucking (guitar, banjo, mandolin) or striking (marimba, xylophone). You can easily set controls for repeat percussion. This allows you to produce a true banjo sound by merely holding a key down. With sustained percussion, you can produce a harp effect.

The rhythm part of organ playing is standard in the top line of all spinet consoles, but optional usually in the end of the lines. It supplies rhythm accompaniment—the sound of non-tuned instruments such as snare drums, brass and cymbal, rhythm blocks, tom-toms and castanets.

Speakers-cabinets-warranties. The lines of organs have the best speakers, as do the top lines of stereo sets. And with many of these sets, you can add many external speakers as you want, enhancing the stereo effect. You can spend as much as you care to on cabinets, or you can settle for a simple yet tasteful housing.

All brand-name manufacturers provide warranties of at least one year on parts and labor, and some provide warranties on certain parts for up to five years. It is doubtful you will have to use your warranty, however, because most organs are very sturdy and reliable. If your organ does have to be sent back for major repairs, your dealer will provide a "loaner" to you over during its absence.

Rental programs. You may wish to play an organ for several weeks or months before committing yourself to a purchase, as you would in selecting any musical instrument. Rental plan costs generally cover the dealer's own out-of-pocket costs of insurance and delivery, with little or no charge for the organ itself. You'll find that the most expended for these rentals is usually applied to the final purchase price, no matter what model is selected.

Sales. Budget problems can be met by taking advantage of sales, although the newest models are normally not available at discounts. Some dealers have seasonal and/or annual sales at which they offer older models, trade-ins (there's more trading up in organs than with any other single instrument) and rental or teaching organs.

Upkeep. Organs require little upkeep—rare calls by service technicians. With most organs today contain transistors (they are a little more economical, conserve space and produce a lower heat level), both transistors and tubes can be replaced in your own home by manufacturers' or dealers' service people.

The most important single consideration when buying an organ is to select the best model you can afford—still keeping in mind your family's interests. Once you've decided, set your own goal: a crowd-pleasing repertoire of popular music, or a satisfying mastery of classical music.

Geon vinyl gives a homeowner a lot more time to do this

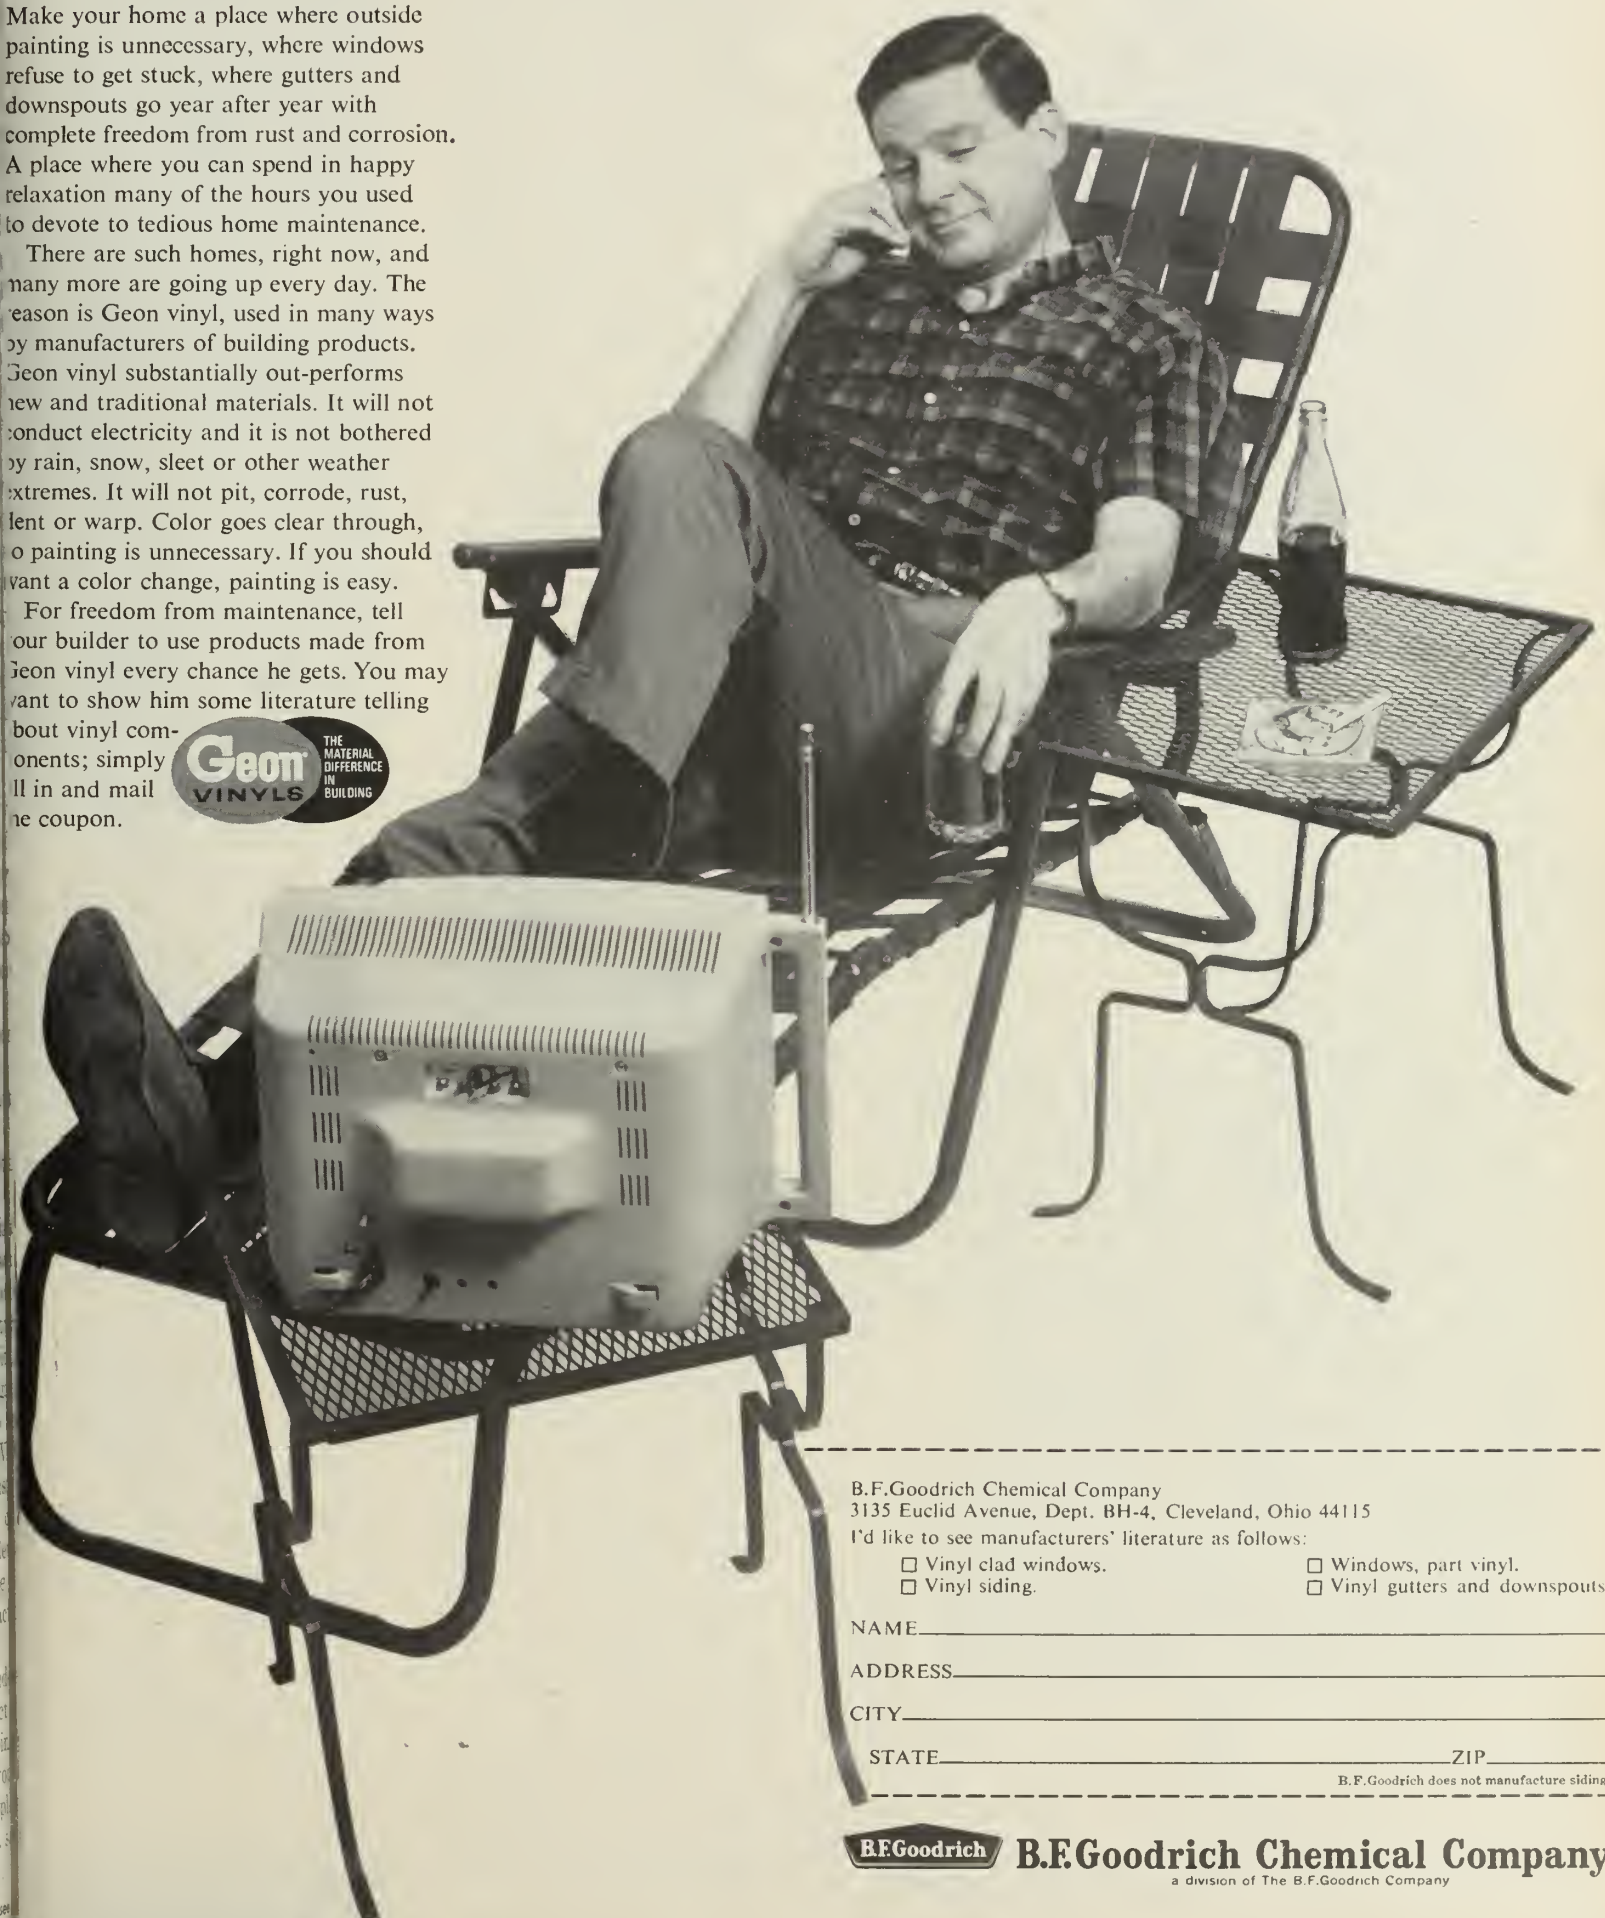

Make your home a place where outside painting is unnecessary, where windows refuse to get stuck, where gutters and downspouts go year after year with complete freedom from rust and corrosion.

A place where you can spend in happy relaxation many of the hours you used to devote to tedious home maintenance.

There are such homes, right now, and many more are going up every day. The reason is Geon vinyl, used in many ways by manufacturers of building products.

Geon vinyl substantially out-performs new and traditional materials. It will not conduct electricity and it is not bothered by rain, snow, sleet or other weather extremes. It will not pit, corrode, rust, dent or warp. Color goes clear through, so painting is unnecessary. If you should want a color change, painting is easy.

For freedom from maintenance, tell your builder to use products made from Geon vinyl every chance he gets. You may want to show him some literature telling about vinyl components; simply fill in and mail the coupon.

How to buy a good dishwasher.

Here are some things to look for if you're looking for a good dishwasher.

First of all, peek inside and see what washes the dishes. Some dishwashers use several spray gimmicks. But spraying isn't washing. Water must have the right velocity, volume and motion to get dishes really clean. (A KitchenAid dishwasher uses a sturdy wash arm, with water action so effective dishes come out completely clean, without any hand-rinsing.)

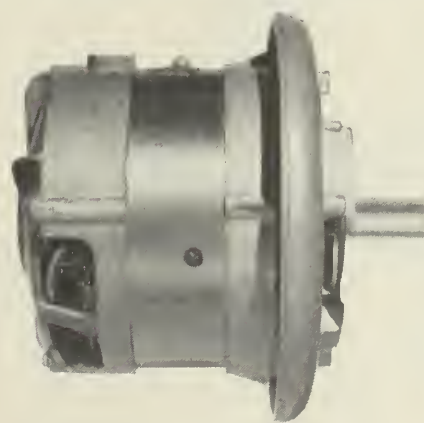

Then check how it dries. Most dishwashers have a simple heating coil that dries dishes the same as if you stuck them in a hot oven. Concentrated heat like this could harm fine china and plasticware. (A KitchenAid dishwasher has a separate heater and fan located outside the wash chamber that circulates hot air over, under and around each dish. It's very thorough and safe.)

Be sure to consider how long the dishwasher will last, too.

This is hard to tell, but here are a few things to look for. Is it made of durable materials? (For example, KitchenAid has porcelain enamel on the inside and outside of the wash chambers.) Is the motor dependable? (Few manufacturers bother to design their own motors. KitchenAid does. And tests them electronically before assembly.) Is the dishwasher inspected after it's assembled? (Every part is thoroughly checked and every single KitchenAid dishwasher is hooked up for a test run before it leaves the factory.) Is the dishwasher made by specialists? (At KitchenAid it is. KitchenAid is built by the people who have made commercial dishwashers for restaurants, hotels, hospitals, etc., for over 80 years; home dishwashers for nearly 20 years. And many of these original home dishwashers are still going strong.)

Another point. Find out how much the dishwasher holds. You'll probably get an answer in place settings. But look for yourself, too. If you see empty corners or notches cut out of racks, the dishwasher has a lot of wasted space.

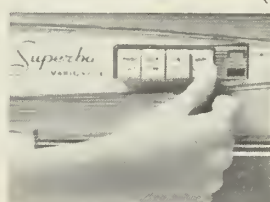

But capacity isn't everything. A good dishwasher should be convenient to use, too. See if you can adjust the racks to hold big things like roasters and deep bowls. And you should be able to pull the racks all the way out so you can reach in the back easily. On a portable dishwasher, can you reach the lower rack without unloading or removing the top rack? And watch out if you have to load dishes in a certain way. This gets to be a pain in the neck.

One more thing. You shouldn't have to fuss with dials or knobs with a good dishwasher. So make sure the dishwasher works completely automatically, at the touch of a button. And if you want your dishes and glasses to dry without any spots get a dishwasher with an Automatic Rinse Agent Dispenser. You'll find this is very important if you live in a hard water area.

Now if you want to save some time before you start looking, here are two more things you can do. (1) Ask some KitchenAid dishwasher owners how they like their dishwashers. (2) Send this Reading is fun for Sarah—as it should be for every child. At age four and a half, she's already choosing her own books at the San Diego, Cal. library. She reads books many third graders find "hard going." Yet she won't enter first grade for another year.

Sarah is typical of thousands of children who learned to read with "Listen and Learn with Phonics"—a reading kit that actually makes reading fun. "Listen and Learn with Phonics" was developed by a reading expert. It has been endorsed, after extensive testing by teachers, schools, and educators.

This practical (and inexpensive) home-learning kit fascinating eager young minds from three to ten. The child hears the letters or sounds on the monograph record, sees them in his book and repeats them himself. This makes an absorbing game of better reading—with amazing results!

FOR EXAMPLE:

Slow or average readers show sudden, often spectacular improvement in reading, in spelling, in understanding.

PROBLEM-SOLVING KITCHEN STORAGE

Right: For maximum storage in minimum floor space, a deep, floor-to-ceiling unit is your best bet. This one, for example, adapts to a wide variety of objects. Half the storage is on the door, making it easy to see and reach everything. For filing lids and bakeware, lath face 8-inch-deep shelves. Rear shelves adjust to fit your wares. Electric broom, plugged into cabinet floor outlet, is ever ready for action.

Photograph: Gennaro. Designer: Charles Taylor. Data: Dorothy Campbell

Photograph: Mizuki. Designer: Glen Alsbaugh Co. Data:

Beware of fixed shelves in deep storage—back half is inaccessible. Solution: slide-outs like these. Buy narrow metal drawer glides for $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch shelves. Curved track lets shelves return to storage almost automatically. To keep utensils from sliding off, add 2-inch strips made of $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch plywood. Above, vertical plywood sections, held in place with molding, file trays and pans.

Photograph: Burgess. Designer: Jordan's, Inc. Data: Lorraine B.

Here's how to solve your bottle and jar problems with tall, deep storage. Use dividers of $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch plywood or hardboard in deep drawers. Space them to hold cartons, single bottles, paper bags, foil, clear plastic. Top quality, ready-made cabinets often include such practical conveniences; or you can build drawers like these yourself. Use them to convert an existing utility or broom cabinet to more efficient storage.

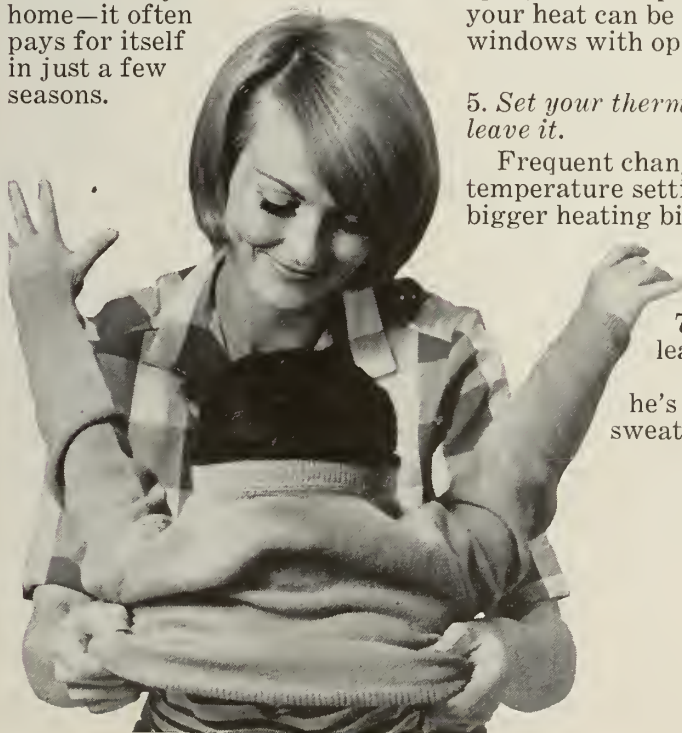

Six ways to cut the cost of your winter heating bills.

1. Have your heating system checked now.

Don't let the first cold snap catch you unprepared for winter. Call your furnace man. He'll make sure your furnace is in safe working order with your gas pilots operating.

2. Insulate.

Insulate floors and ceilings and you'll cut heating costs up to 45%. Good insulation increases the value of your home—it often pays for itself in just a few seasons.

3. Weatherstrip.

Weatherstripping around doors and windows plugs heat leaks and keeps cold air outside. A doorjamb may require a metal strip to take the constant friction of opening and closing. Loose windows may need a thick felt stripping.

4. Close dampers and drapes.

When not using your fireplace, close the damper. If you leave it open, heat escapes. Also, 16% of your heat can be lost through windows with open drapes.

5. Set your thermostat—and leave it.

Frequent changes in room temperature settings mean a bigger heating bill. Agree on a healthy thermostat setting (say 70°) and leave it there.

If junior says he's cold, put a sweater on him.

6. Change filters.

Most forced air furnaces have filters to trap dust. For maximum heat flow they should be replaced every six months. Clean dust and lint out of wall and floor heaters periodically, too.

Bigger bills, but lower rates.

Your winter PG&E bills will reflect increased heating and lighting, TV watching, more hot meals and more appliances in use.

But there have been six reductions in your PG&E rates in the past four years. So summer and winter, your PG&E service is a bigger family bargain than ever.

SERVING SPACE WHERE YOU NEED IT

No need to stretch and strain. Try a cook-and-serve area where you can work on three sides. All of these have plenty of counter space, ideal for serving.

Here's a cook-top peninsula that puts waste floor space right to work. Food pantry is easily reached. High (42-inch) bar in background conceals cooking clutter from the dinette beyond. Chopping board beside cook-top lifts out for scrubbing. If you're short, have cook-top counter 32-34 inches above floor.

Angled contemporary cook-serve bar sets off dining area from kitchen. Triangular section on the end doubles for snacks and meal planning. Three-foot-wide counter provides good splatter protection around cook-top. For a dramatic dash, the black ventilator hood is vented from an open-beam ceiling.

Photograph: Suter, Architect: James Slager, A.I.A.

If a standard range is your choice, you needn't relegate it to a side wall. Here's how to build it in a peninsula or island. Storage and counter surround 3 sides of range. The high backsplash facing dinette area conceals the back view of the range control panel. Peninsula is 3 feet wide, 6½ feet long.

Step-up serve bar walls in the cook-top in this kitchen. A 16-inch-wide serving top overhangs the regular counter giving wider surface for buffet-style meals. Glassware, dishes, and napkins are stored below serve bar facing dinette. And don't overlook the extra storage for utensils, platters, and trays.

Lever Brothers' new Phase III has the mildness that's missing from deodorant bars and the protection that's missing from cream bars.

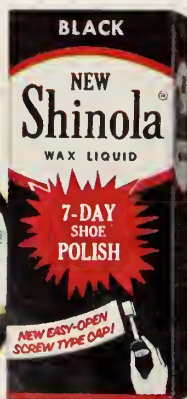

You'd have to bolt a deodorant bar and a cream bar together to get the deodorant and cream that's in one bar of Phase III.

MAKE A SPLASH WITH MUMS!

Wind up the garden year with the splashiest colors of season. If you failed to plant enough chrysanthemums spring, visit your local nursery or garden store to get blooming-size plants of garden mum varieties. You can often find plants for well under a dollar each, so three or four dollars will buy several weeks of color. Choose plants that are beginning to bloom for maximum flowering time.

Photographs: H.

Above. Place the mums along the border of your patio for close-up enjoyment, or use them to spark up a flower border. You can leave the plants in their containers and move them about as needed—or remove them from their cans or pots and plant in the ground. Whichever you do, be sure to keep the soil moist at all times so all the blossoms remain at peak of perfection as long as possible.

Below. Give your porch or terrace a color lift with a planter or box filled with 'full-blown chrysanthemums. Here, a large asbestos-cement planter on the porch floor holds a dramatic lineup of mum blossoms. In cold-winter areas, after the blossoms fade, overwinter the plants in cold frames or plant them tight to a south wall and mulch heavily. In mild areas, plant them in the garden under a light, loose mulch.

SEPTEMBER GARDENING WHERE YOU LIVE!

Norvell Gillespie, Better Homes and Gardens Western Field Editor

New garden dimension. Here in the West during the last ten years, a complete revolution has taken place in garden entertaining at night. Homeowners, capitalizing on that extra dimension of the "outdoor living room," are enjoying barbecues and entertaining under the stars. September evenings are made for these outdoor get-togethers. What makes it all possible, of course, are the improved night-lighting fixtures. Now they are priced low, the designs are appealing, and they are long lasting. Here are a few basic points on garden lighting for those of you who are anxious to put electric sparkles in your garden.

The most effective night lighting comes from a soft glow cast upward under a tree or large shrub to dramatize the lines of trunks and branches. Avoid the temptation to get tricky with colored lights. White light gives the best effect when it is cast downward—as from round, pie-plate-shaped fixtures less than three feet tall. Select simple fixtures that won't jar the eye during daylight hours. And above all, don't give in to the usual temptation to use lots of fixtures. Just a few, skillfully placed, can invisibly simulate moonlight and cast bewitching shadows across an outdoor living area.

It's wise to use the services of a professional electrician. Then, there are no mistakes and the installation is in for keeps. Less than $100 will provide several fixtures that will be useful for a lifetime.

Houseplant culture. Tropical plants are on the upswing in popularity—no longer is the old-fashioned rubber plant the kingpin. But, a close relative known as the fiddle-leaf fig (Ficus pandurata) has proven to be more dramatic. There's a wide selection of colors, forms, and textures of other houseplants. Indeed, the better nurseries—even the supermarkets—have special departments devoted to them.

How long will a plant look good in your home? It depends on you and the care you give it. You can depend on a good six months from it even with so-so care. Avoid the two extremes of drowning or dehydrating your houseplants, and they can survive for many months at least.

New soil makes it possible for them to continue for years. Normally, repotting once a year is sufficient. And, there's no doubt about it, it's best to buy a commercial houseplant potting mixture. Why fuss with the job of gathering all the individual ingredients, mixing them, and making sure food values are balanced? There are many brands available and they are not expensive.

Repotting is a relatively simple business. A plant with multiple-crowned heads—such as fern, sansevieria, aspidistra, and some philodendrons—can be divided if it gets too big for its container, or if you want more plants. Here's how you go about it.

The best way to get a plant out of a pot is to knock it out. Place your hand over the soil and around the crown of the plant and invert it. Give the rim of pot a sound rap against the edge of a table and the soil ball will loosen and fall out. Have foliage free of table so it doesn't get bruised.

Either cut or pull divisions apart. If soil is loose and the crowns not too tightly joined together, it is best to pull gently apart because fewer roots are lost in this way. Don't worry about lost soil—you're replacing with a better kind.

Center the divisions in new or clean pots and fill the area around the soil ball with fresh potting soil. Soil level should be one-half inch below pot rim to make watering easy. Soak the pot in rim-deep water so soil ball is thoroughly wet through.

Peony philosophy. Herbaceous peonies, the ones with the big, dinner-plate-size, satiny blooms are funny critters. Summer heat doesn't hurt the clumps at all, but lack of a winter chilling period does! That's why they're not really successful in coastal California or the Southwest—yet are great in the interior valleys and high deserts. North-westerners, of course, grow them to perfection.

Eventually, if you're a successful grower, there comes a time to divide them, and September is the month to do it. They do not require dividing often. Every five years or so is ample. Indeed, some peonies go on for many years without getting excessively crowded. The most likely reason for dividing them now is to get an increase in plants to give starts to friends, or to extend your beds.

Prepare the planting beds for the new divisions a couple of weeks before you set out the plants. Put a trowelful of bone meal in the bottom of each new planting hole and mix it well into the soil. Following is the best way to divide your overgrown peonies.

Lift peony clumps with a spading fork and wash the thick roots to remove all the soil. Cut through the crown with a sharp knife to get three to five buds on each division.

Dig a generous-size hole and blend peat moss or leaf mold into the soil removed. Center peony division in hole and hold so budded crown is one inch below soil surface—a tool handle laid across hole is a good depth gauge. Water in thoroughly.

Dependable perennials. These belong to the class of useful bedders that brighten your garden faithfully for years each September: bleeding-heart, rehmannia, and helenium.

Bleeding-heart is a 12- to 15-inch-high plant with ferny, lettuce-green, finely cut foliage and leafless flower stalks topped with arching clusters of pink or white blossoms. It's a vigorous plant, and its blooming period generally stretches from spring until early fall.

Rehmannia is a coarse-leaved perennial that looks somewhat like a cross between a foxglove and a penstemon. Flower stalks are about two feet high with clusters of rose or cream-colored tubular blossoms. Gardeners who know rehmannia give it four stars for its long blooming period.

Helenium is a member of the daisy tribe. The flowers, according to the variety being grown, range from bright yellow to bronzy red. They always have high cushiony centers. The plants are rugged and average three feet in height. Last year (1966) was a bonanza season for them throughout the Pacific Northwest, especially in Butchart's Gardens in Victoria.

Of this trio, the first two prefer shade. And the helenium likes sun—as befits members of the daisy clan.

Ugly mildew. As the close of the active growing season approaches, we are faced with mildew. Watch for evidence of grayish white powdery patches on leaves, branches, and buds of roses, lilacs, euonymus, tuberous begonias, dahlias, chrysanthemums, and zinnias. You'll need a fungicide to control it. Folpet, found in many commercial sprays or dusts, should be applied according to manufacturer's directions.

Trim the rock garden. There are plenty of jobs to do this month in most rock gardens in the

GARDENING WHERE YOU LIVE!

Continued

Northwest, but many of them can be ignored for awhile. The one thing that should be done right away is to cut out faded flowers. Those that need it most are the flowers that produce great mats of bloom which shield fresh new growth from sunlight and air.

Food crops to plant now. You can set out plants of the vegetables usually associated with fall—broccoli, cabbage, and Brussels sprouts—and plant seeds of turnips, mustard, and spinach. You can also continue plantings of leaf lettuce, radishes, carrots, green onions, parsley, and chard. September-planted vegetables get off to a fast start. Give them all the help you can by preparing a fertile, well-worked seedbed. Treat it with a combination insecticide-fungicide vegetable dust to prevent troubles. Keep the ground surface moist until the roots are firmly established.

What a cold frame can do. Used correctly, a cold frame will provide many gardening thrills. For it is the key to propagation of plants in a professional manner, whether from seed, cuttings, or grafts. In effect, it's an inexpensive greenhouse.

Perhaps the easiest way to describe a cold frame is to say it is a structure built along the lines of a child's sandbox with a glass or plastic roof over it.

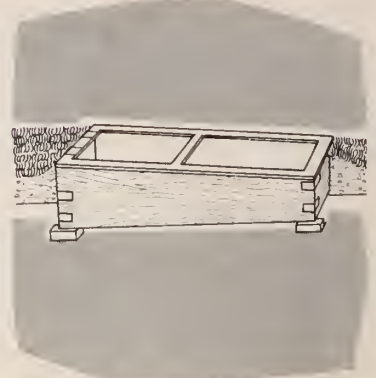

Cold frames are really more commonly seen throughout the Pacific Northwest than in California and points south. Glass is the favored material there.

3x6-foot sashes are usually used as covers. Here's how you can build your own.

An avid gardener deserves a permanent cold frame to help him handle the many plants he needs. The cost of the unit is quickly compensated for in the savings realized through growing plants from seed and cuttings. You can substitute concrete blocks for the brick. Three-by-six-foot standard cold frame sash are best used here.

For the not-so-avid or economy-minded gardener, this knock-down cold frame is the answer. An old storm window forms the top and scrap lumber the sides. Make the low end 12 inches deep and the high end 18. Stabilize corners with metal angles and set on four bricks. Mound leaves or straw around the lower six or eight inches of frame and you are in business.

The work of a cold frame is extended the minute you add artificial heat. In the old days, they used 18 inches of fresh manure in a pit directly below the cold frame to supply the heat (however, I've seen this practiced less than half a dozen times in the last 20 years). The modern system is to use soil-heating cables for they can provide a steady, even heat. With a cable and thermostat, temperatures can be controlled to range from 35 to 100 degrees.

The warmth and moisture of a heated frame makes it possible to root cuttings which might otherwise be difficult to propagate. The heat also makes it possible to get a head start on the early sowing of annuals and vegetables in spring.

Early bird, etc. - - -. It's true. Most spring bulbs will be available in stores next month and the early orders get the best. Some of the specialty bulbs aren't stocked in any but the largest cities, and many gardeners must order them from catalogs. It's wise to order early to get in on the first shipments. And, it's particularly important to order the smaller bulbs early as they dry out quickly if out of the ground too long.

Garden philosophy. The gifted naturalist and "father" of Yosemite National Park, the mighty John Muir, once wrote of his beloved Sierra country, "Who could ever guess that so rough a wilderness should yet be so fine, so full of good things. One seems to be in a majestic domed pavilion in which a grand play is being acted with scenery and music and incense—all the furniture and action so interesting we are in no danger of being called on to endure one dull moment."

Frank Grady's wife has six wonderful reasons for buying Northern Tissue.

Seven, counting Frank. With a lovable crew like this, it's important she know softness and value. With Northern, she gets more softness for the money than with any other bathroom tissue she can buy. How many reasons do you have?

LOOK WHAT WOOD CAN DO FOR WINDOWS

Photograph: Lisanti. Interior Designer: James Peterson, A.I.D., The H. Chambers Co. Data: Kit Tyson

If you come up against a window decorating problem that draperies can't solve, call in wood as an ally. Use it to camouflage below-window heating and cooling units; unify a bank of windows; add architectural interest to a boxlike room. Soften the final effect with generously draped fabric, or add the spice of pattern with decorative window shades.

Above: While a window wall is a great source of natural light, it does pose a decorating problem. How can you handle such an imposing sweep of glass—imaginatively? The simple addition of wooden filigree panels did the trick in this bedroom. Deep-toned traverse draperies heighten the strong impact of the stark white panels.

Below: So your room is minus any sort of basic eye-appeal? Supply it yourself, using wood as the raw material. In this living room, Roman arches were cut from $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch walnut plywood and built into the window wall. Traverse draperies, sheer enough to admit sunlight, hang in the pocket between the windows and the arched panels.

Above: This handsome disguise turns an unwieldy bay window into a background for a furniture grouping. Ceiling-high posts of waxed wormy chestnut are spaced evenly from one end of the window to the other and notched to fit around the dropped ceiling of the bay. The front face of this drop is concealed by lambrequins, edged with braid to harmonize with trim on draperies. Casement curtains screen the view, but allow a soft light to come through.

Below: How do you dress a window burdened with below-sill heating and cooling units? One solution is to conceal equipment in a custom-built cabinet such as this one. A series of gracefully arched frames draws the eye upward. Fabric-laminated window shades add a distinctive pattern accent.

IF YOU WANT GOOD, FRESH, WHIPPED CREAM,
YOU STILL HAVE TO WORK FOR IT. (Sorry about that, Chef.)

There's a lot to be said for whipped cream in those aerosol cans. For one thing, there's no mixing bowl to clean.

On the other hand, there's no mixing bowl for the kids to lick, and kids hardly get to do that anymore.

Besides, there's nothing like the real thing—good, fresh whipped cream made by your very own self. Nothing quite so white, so rich and velvety. Because there's nothing so fresh.

Freshness. That's the Foremost forte. Foremost Whipping Cream comes to you as fresh as everything else from Foremost, and everything from Foremost is always fastidiously fresh.

NEW FREEDOM SHARES

What are they?
Who may buy them?

Americans have put their savings to work for freedom through U. S. Savings Bonds for many years. New Freedom Shares do the same job . . . plus. Read how.

Freedom Shares are U. S. Savings Notes. They pay a higher return than Savings Bonds, 4.74% when held to maturity. And they mature in just four-and-a-half years.

For regular Bond buyers only

These new Freedom Shares — which are not redeemable for the first year — are offered on a one-for-one basis with E Bonds, but only to people who belong to the Payroll Savings Plan where they work or the Bond-a-Month Plan where they bank.

There are four denominations of Freedom Shares, each of which may be paired with a Series E Bond of the same or larger denomination, as a "package."

For instance, for $39 total, you can purchase a Savings Bond that matures at $25 and a Freedom Share that matures at $25.

America needs your help

When you buy Savings Bonds and Freedom Shares, you do an important job for freedom, backing our men in Vietnam and helping to keep our country economically strong. The need is urgent. What you do counts.

Sign up

Tell your supervisor or the Payroll Department where you work (or any officer where you bank) that you'd like to join a Bond purchase plan. Decide how much you'll save . . . whether you want Freedom shares as well as Bonds . . . and just sign the authorization card.

You'll be helping your country as you help yourself. And the country needs your help.

GARDEN GATES THAT DO THE JOB

To be practical, a garden gate must be sturdily built and wide enough to let carts, lawn mowers, and other equipment clear the opening. It should also be a complement to its adjoining fence or wall. Here are three good examples.

Black wood strips do a good job of decorating this unusual gate designed by Rear Admiral A. R. Montgomery for his Carmel, California, home.

Note how he extends and unifies the design by continuing the pattern along the top section of the fence. Solid construction of this type offers complete privacy. It is best used in areas that are sheltered from high winds.

Handsomely styled white picket gate and fence are good choices for the naturalized setting. This gate, 36 inches wide, 48 inches high, uses 1x8- and 1x4-inch boards spaced 1 inch apart.

The narrow boards are alternated with wider ones for pattern interest. Their slightly rounded corners give a smooth, finished appearance. Latch and hinges are black wrought iron.

Simple design makes this attractive self-bracing gate easy to build.

It measures 42x54 inches and is constructed of 2x2 boards. Horizontal cross pieces at the top are set 4 inches apart; verticals in the center, 3 inches.

The corners are securely joined by steel angles, eliminating need for any cross braces. Gate posts are anchored in concrete to give additional support.

HELP YOUR CHILD LEARN

children write thank-you letters for Christmas or birthday gifts, or calculate how much change they'll get at the store when they want to buy something, or work out recipes for six portions when the cook book gives figures for eight.

Games help, too. The most imaginative "reformer" in arithmetic teaching says that he first got the idea of what math was about by working out the odds in Monopoly. There are all sorts of games these days—from sophisticated logic games like Wiff'N' Proof to word games like Scrabble—which require work on the sort of thing the schools demand. They also give an extra frame of reference for the idea that must be learned. What child can resist playing a game with one or both of his parents, especially if he wins once in a while?

All this takes patience, of course—especially if the child "isn't learning." One startling fact coming out of the psychologists' study of learning is that "wrong answers" are very hard to forget. One correction just doesn't work. Wrong answers stick so tightly because the belief that you have the right one is its own reinforcement.

At Harvard, Jerome Bruner has conducted an ingenious experiment to demonstrate how wrong answers at the beginning can cripple understanding. He projects a slide onto a screen through an out-of-focus lens, and then gradually corrects the focus. The subject of the experiment tells Bruner what he thinks is in the picture as soon as he feels the focus is clear enough for him to tell. If he gets it wrong, which he usually does, he will persist in misidentifying it long after it is so clear that nobody seeing it for the first time would find it puzzling.

Wrong answers can make ripples far away, through "transfer" of our learning from one situation to another—a mysterious business which psychologists can't fully explain. It seems to occur through the construction of "concepts," which in turn depend on the age of the child.

Psychologist Albert Caron of the National Institute of Health has conducted experiments with children in the Washington area to prove the absolute importance of the child's age in the development of necessary simple concepts. He confronts three-year-olds with a circle and a square; there is a piece of candy under the circle but not under the square. Through primitive reinforcement, the child quickly learns to pick up the circle shape. But when Caron substitutes an arch or an ellipse or a rounded line for the circle, and a diamond or a corner or a jagged line for the box, the three-year-old has to start all over again. He doesn't have the "concept" of "roundness" which would help him transfer his learning about circles to a drawing of an arch. Before age five, however, every child has acquired that concept.

The danger with a mistake—particularly as your child grows older—extends beyond a wrong answer to a specific problem. There's also a risk that a mistaken concept has taken hold, which can bedevil the child through a whole series of similar future problems. That's why Professor Skinner, in developing what came to be called "programmed learning," insisted on the importance of avoiding mistakes during the learning process. Provided they're caught early enough, mistakes can often be educational. The important thing is to "extinguish" the error quickly and to make sure the right answer fits a child's understanding better than the wrong one.

Here again, there is no substitute for patient listening while your child explains how he got the wrong answer, even if his explanation involves stubborn arguments that his answer is really right. That's something a teacher doesn't want to hear in class—but parents can listen. After you or your child has pinned down the source of the mistake, it's useful to suggest a few similar problems during the next few days—asking him how to spell "relieve," for example, if he went wrong on "believe."

Even when you don't know the right answers, you can often help your child just by listening. What counts is not how his explanation of New Math sounds to you, but how it sounds to him when he has to explain out loud why he's satisfied with the answers he has. Just make sure you're willing to admit you don't know an answer—and you don't tell him he's wrong unless you're sure he really is wrong.

All this takes time. School, teachers, and your child himself must do most of the work of learning. Still, the push you can give—by looking and listening, by reinforcement and explanation—may count for more than you will ever know.

PREPARING FOR HEALTH NEEDS AFTER AGE 65

Thanks to modern medicine, the problems of aging are no longer "solved" by premature death. Nor is one's later life viewed as a period of neglect and despair. As the number of Americans past retirement age soars (more than 19 million are over 65 today), bold new attempts are being made to fill the vintage years with dignity, accomplishment, and pleasure. Better Homes and Gardens presents this article to help you—or your parents—plan knowledgeably for that more rewarding future.

LIVING ALONE AND LIKING IT

The custom of grandparents living with their children has all but disappeared in this country. Today, most Americans who retire in good health prefer to maintain separate quarters—and their sense of independence.

If their present house is neither too large nor too expensive, a retired couple with roots in a town is often wise to stay put. Others with weaker community ties, or who are starting to feel neglected and lonely, are better off moving to a pleasant new environment especially designed for their age group. The recent boom in housing for the aged gives such people an unprecedented choice—and one that demands the most careful selection.

The first step is to outline the kind of place you want and start shopping early. But before you do, ask yourself some basic questions. What type of living quarters do you prefer? A house? An apartment? A hotel? A trailer? A high-rise condominium in which you could purchase your own apartment? How much can you comfortably afford? What climate do you favor? Do you like the city or the suburbs? How much housekeeping assistance will you need? How much direct medical supervision?

When your general requirements are firmly in mind, get a good guidebook such as A National Directory on Housing for Older People. It describes hundreds of facilities, including varieties seldom heard of just a few years ago. Among the most popular are:

Retirement cities. Houses and apartments are for sale or rent in a self-contained community, often in a year-round warm climate. As with other types of housing for the elderly, there is often, though not always, a minimum age requirement. One typical retirement village has cooperative apartments ranging in price from $13,500 to $18,000. A down payment of ten percent is required, then monthly charges of $150 to $220. This amount covers not only the mortgage costs, but taxes, insurance, maintenance of the grounds, medical care in the hospital and clinic on the grounds, and rights to a wide variety of recreational facilities.

High-rise apartments. These exist mostly in big cities, and provide facilities designed especially for the aged—ramps and wide doors to accommodate wheelchairs, buttons for summoning medical assistance, electrical outlets that don't require stooping, and bathtubs with grab bars. Kitchens are included in most units, but usually there are optional dining rooms, too—as well as lounges, hobby rooms, and often an infirmary or nursing service. Most retirement apartments are rental units; others are condominiums. Still others require "founders fees" of from $7,000 to $30,000 that guarantee you a lifetime lease. Monthly service charges typically run around $150.

Residence clubs. These are converted hotels redesigned as retirement apartments. Few units have attached kitchens (though some do have makeshift cooking arrangements), so two meals a day in a central dining room are usually included in the rent. So are furnishings, linen, housekeeping service, and recreational facilities. The lobby and lower floors often have such conveniences as a grocery store, beauty parlor, doctors' and dentists' offices, library, theater, and laundry. An infirmary or full-time nursing service may also be provided in some of the clubs.

Campus-type facilities. Here, a self-contained community accommodates the changing needs of older people. Typically, these multi-type retirement villages include cottages, apartments, non-housekeeping units, houses, a nursing home, and a hospital. Residents may transfer from one type of housing to another.

After you've determined which of the above residences most closely fit your needs, write to some likely candidates for more details. Then visit one or more: inspect the facilities and question the officials. Above all, talk with some residents to see if they are congenial and pleased with their way of life. You may find, after looking over retirement housing, that you would rather live where you're not reminded that these are indeed your later years. If you are in good health and have financial reserves, you can settle anywhere you like, or even become a vagabond.

MAKING THE MOST OF SPARE TIME

Most persons welcome retirement as a time to follow up on activities they postponed earlier: travel, reading, hobbies, sports, adult education, second careers. Many discover they would rather help others. The pay isn't great, but the sense of personal involvement and service is.

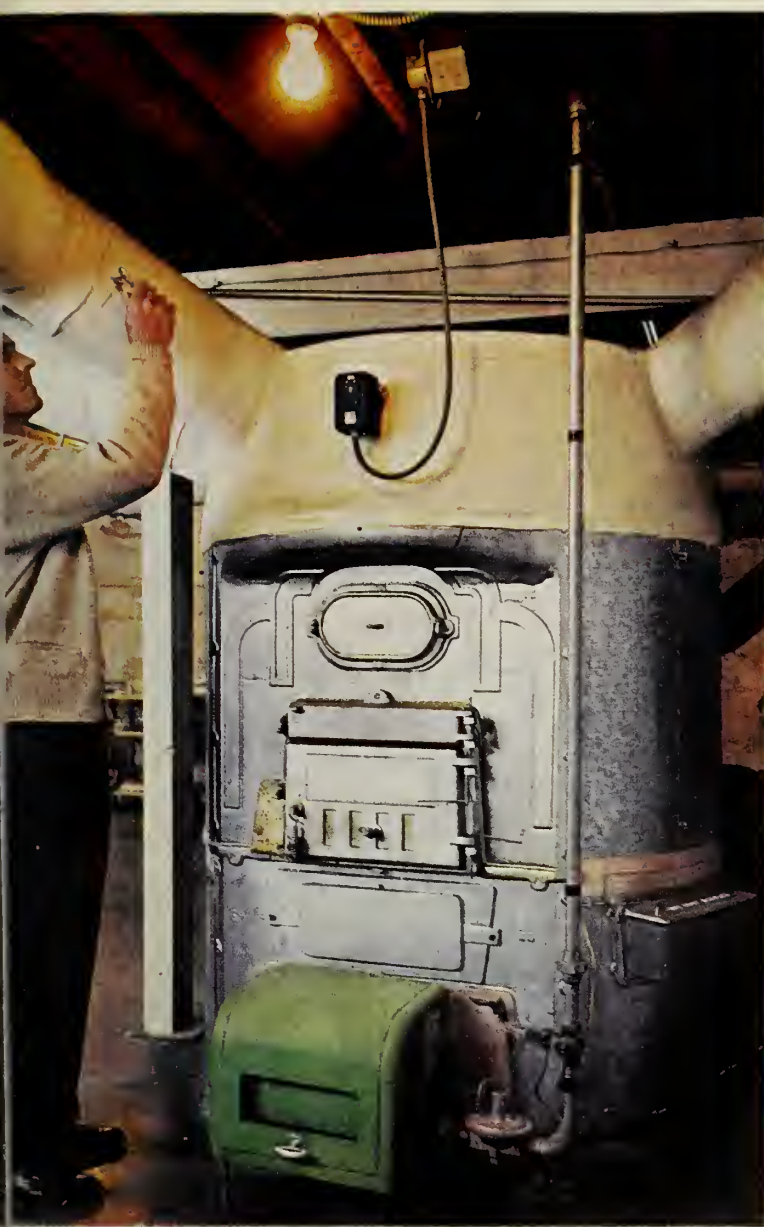

New opportunities for meaningful service are popping up every day. Older men and women in New York have recently been invited to the public schools, where they share their firsthand knowledge with youngsters studying history. Other older people are being asked to reminisce into tape recorders as part of a "living history" project.

Another rewarding outlet is politics. With a national election approaching, many prospective candidates, as well as both major political parties, are scouting for campaign volunteers. Now an increasing percentage of the electorate, mature men and women are more welcome than ever.

Qualified adults over 60 may also enroll in the Foster Grandparents Program. In it, they'll help orphaned, neglected, or unwanted children. Typical pay is $1.25 an hour, but the ultimate rewards are impossible to evaluate.

Churches, libraries, hospitals, schools, charitable organizations by the dozens—all need assistance that can often be provided by volunteers living in retirement.

MEDICARE: WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

To enroll for Medicare's hospital insurance, applicants must satisfy a new requirement after January 1, 1968. Anyone who reaches 65 before that date need never have worked under Social Security to qualify for benefits. But thereafter you will need Social Security credits, the exact amount depending on your age. (Check with your local Social Security office.) If you're the wife or widow of a man whose earnings record qualifies, you become eligible at age 65 regardless of your own working background.

The requirement of Social Security work credits beginning in 1968 applies only to hospital insurance. Medicare's voluntary medical insurance—Plan B—will still be available to anyone at age 65.

Enrollment in Medicare's Plan B—the voluntary insurance for doctor bills—is never automatic. You must sign up for it. The best time to apply is in the three-month period preceding the month of your 65th birthday. You can still enroll during the month of your birthday or in any of the three months that follow it, but in that case your coverage is delayed. If you fail to seize your first opportunity, you cannot sign up (and will thus be unprotected) until the next general enrollment period: the last three months of every odd-numbered year. This delay may also mean higher premiums. And if you don't enroll within three years, you become ineligible.

The Medicare law is frequently misinterpreted as it applies to nursing homes. You do not qualify for Medicare's extended care benefits simply by living in a nursing home, even if you do so on a doctor's recommendation and the facility meets Medicare standards. You qualify only if you transfer to the home following a hospital stay of at least three days and within two weeks after being discharged from the hospital. Also, the care you receive in the nursing home must be related to the condition you are hospitalized for. For the first 20 days in the nursing home, Medicare pays the full cost of covered services. Then it pays for an additional 80 days except for $5 a day which the patient pays. After that, all benefits stop—although you could qualify for the same benefits again if you suffer illness at least 60 days after your release and have not, during that time, been an in-patient in any hospital's extended-care facility, or skilled nursing home.

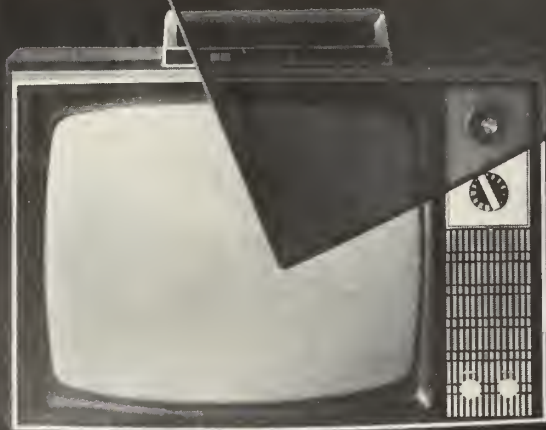

NURSING HOMES THAT CARE

"Nursing homes" that don't deserve that label are on their way out. Cheerless, ill-equipped, overcrowded, and dirty—many of these homes had no kind of medical program and never knew the presence of a nurse.

Thanks to new government regulations, nursing homes qualifying under Medicare must now be primarily engaged in providing round-the-clock skilled nursing care to patients who do not need full hospital services but are not well enough to go home. In addition, these homes must meet standards of safety and cleanliness, and have a working agreement with a convenient, qualified hospital. Clinical records must be accurate; each patient's care in the home must be supervised by a doctor. All procedures are expected to be constantly reviewed by a committee of doctors.

It's possible that a home without cer-tification still provides quality care. Make sure you know why it isn't certified before you make application. Remember, you forfeit any possible Medicare payments if you enter an uncertified home.

THE COST OF RETIRING EARLY—OR LATE

The majority of company plans, as well as the Social Security program, endorse retirement at 65; that's when full benefits start. But automation and the flood of younger workers now make it practical in some industries for employees to step aside sooner—and many company pension plans have therefore been liberalized to make early retirement a great deal more attractive.

As for Social Security, you can start your monthly payments as early as age 62—age 60 if you're a widow receiving benefits on your deceased husband's account. The sooner you start them, the smaller the checks are, but the wisdom of waiting until 65 is often exaggerated. In fact, if you stop working at age 62, you will always receive more actual dollars for the first fifteen years of retirement; only if you live beyond 77 will the money you lost by accepting smaller payments equal what you gained by getting a three-year head start. Benefits to survivors remain the same.

For those who want to keep working after retirement age, Social Security restrictions were eased in 1965. You can now earn as much as $1,500 a year and still receive a check every month. For each $2 you earn between $1,500 and $2,700, you receive $1 less in Social Security. Over $2,700, you lose $1 in benefits for every $1 you earn. After you reach age 72, you can earn all you want without penalty. And regardless of your age or how much over $1,500 you earn, you can still receive a check for any month in which your earnings are less than $125 and you do not actively work in self-employment.

Industry generally discourages employees from working after 65, but there are exceptions. Some men over 65 today are receiving full salaries plus full retirement payments for staying on the job a little longer. Such men and such incentives are rare, however.

THE YOUNGER GENERATION'S CONTRIBUTION

The obligations assumed by an older person's family have shifted in recent years. Today, aging parents seldom share their children's houses, nor do they expect or require as much help in meeting bills as was formerly the case—thanks mainly to the nation's new affluence, the increase in Social Security coverage (especially including Medicare), and more liberal pension plans.

But their psychological needs have, if anything, increased. Youth often seems to be "in charge" today, and as people live longer, they grow ever more susceptible to loneliness and the pangs of neglect. Government and industry are powerless to help them. But family and friends can usually dissipate these feelings—and disprove the saying "out of sight, out of mind"—by taking a little time to show their thoughtfulness. Frequent letters, phone calls, photographs, visits—no one needs reminding of the many ways there are to make a tiny repayment on what is frequently a very large debt.

A KITCHEN LONG ON EFFICIENCY

Good kitchens come in all shapes and sizes—the common denominator is good utilization of available space. In this narrow kitchen, for example, the 20-foot length is a time-saving asset when both walls are lined with work centers. A 3½- to 4-foot-wide aisleway leaves passing space for more than one person, yet keeps work areas on both walls just a step apart.

Above: A three-foot-wide and ten-foot-long work counter, storage complex, and serving area works for both kitchen and dining room. And, it adds worlds of convenience during party or holiday meal preparation. Short folding doors close off the kitchen view for formal dinners and parties.

Center: With stools on the dining side, the overhanging counter becomes a handy breakfast-snack center. Deep cabinet beside door houses a mobile cart for living room and patio serving.

Below: Range, refrigerator, and sink are but a step apart—yet each has its own storage and counter space, making it a complete work center. Storage cabinets are walnut faced; ceramic tile and vinyl floor blend tones of ocher and olive for a muted color scheme.

HOW TO BUY BOARD

Most handymen walk out of a lumberyard with a better piece of wood than they need for their project. They want to do a good job around the house and feel a better board will insure better results.

The truth of the matter is—as most lumber men would agree—No. 2 common is usually your best bet with board lumber, unless the project requires perfection.

From a run-of-mill board, No. 2 common, you'll be able to cut many lengths and widths that are perfectly sound and clear. What's left will have some knots, but will make good utility stock. To buy a board that is all clear, you'd pay twice as much.

As roughsawn lumber comes out of the planer, experts sort it into nine different grades, established by the lumber industry. There are two broad categories, select and common. Select is graded A to D. Common is graded No. 1 to No. 5. Few lumberyards find it practical to carry all grades, but here's a list of them:

Select

● A—pure gold. Usually sold by specialty wood houses.

● B—blemish-free. Sometimes called "B and better."

● C—experts can find small defects. The board may be off-color or have imperfect grain.

● D—you'll see a few knots, although never over 1/2-inch in diameter. Most boards are relatively unblemished to the casual eye, and all of them are completely smooth to the touch.

Common

● No. 1—you rarely see it, as such. More often it goes into the D select pile or the No. 2 common pile.

● No. 2—shows a few knots, but they are tight and won't come out. The edges should be unmarked by knots and should be square end to end.

● No. 3—bigger knots and more of them. There may be knots or bark on edges, knots that have fallen out, and pitch streaks. Includes good boards that may have been improperly sawn and didn't plane smooth on both sides. Generally this is the lowest grade of lumber you should consider.

● No. 4 and 5—usually sawed into crating or sheathing.

You will sometimes notice a difference in character and color between the common and select grades. This is because they may actually be different species of wood.

Until you get used to them, the "nominal" dimensions of lumber may give you trouble.

They include building, remodeling, family and recreation room ideas, storage and closets, so that if you have something in mind to do about the house, perhaps the actual plan is ready and waiting for you. What do you need? Write Better Homes and Gardens, Reader Service Dept. BHF, 1716 Lost Street, Des Moines, Iowa 50303.

Makes Eating With FALSE TEETH

Up to 35% Easier

Clinical tests prove you can now eat and chew better—make dentures average up to 35% more effective—if you sprinkle a little FASTEETH on your plates. FASTEETH holds uppers and lowers more firmly so they feel more comfortable. FASTEETH is not acid—doesn't sour. No gummy, pasty taste. Helps check "denture odor". Dentures that fit are essential to health. So see your dentist regularly. Get FASTEETH at all drug counters.

The chart shown here will help clarify these differences in dimension as you build.

GUIDE TO LUMBER SIZES

NOMINAL SIZE INCHES	ACTUAL SIZE INCHES	BOARD FEET PER FOOT OF LENGTH
1x2	25/32x1 5/8	1/6
1x4	25/32x3 5/8	1/3
1x6	25/32x5 5/8	1/2
1x10	25/32x9 1/2	5/6
1x12	25/32x11 1/2	1
2x4	1 5/8x3 5/8	2/3
2x6	1 5/8x5 5/8	1
2x10	1 5/8x9 1/2	1 2/3
2x12	1 5/8x11 1/2	2
3x6	2 5/8x5 5/8	1 1/2
4x4	3 5/8x3 5/8	1 1/3
4x6	3 5/8x5 5/8	2

Another important point is that it's harder for a mill to turn out wide, long, clean boards than to turn out short, narrow, clean boards. Hence, lumber wider than 12 inches and longer than 16 feet may run as much as a grade higher in unit price.

Lumber prices are given by the board foot, a measurement standing for a board one inch thick, 12 inches wide, and 12 inches long.

Transportation is a factor, so prices often depend on how far from the forests you live. Here are some proportions, however, that you can easily apply to other widths and your location: if you pay 60 cents a board foot for "B and better," you will probably pay 35 cents for No. 2 common and 25 cents for No. 3 common.

These prices suggest a pair of rules for buying lumber for use in repairs and projects around the house.

If you need a piece of clear pine 16 feet or so long, to paint smooth or finish clear—for a cornice or some other important decorative use—go ahead and buy select.

If the need is for shorter, narrower lengths of clear that you can cut out of No. 2, buy the cheaper stuff and use the less-than-perfect pieces for some non-critical work.

Many experienced handymen keep an eye on the No. 2 pile at their favorite lumberyard and when a shipment of good lumber comes in, they select their own private stock.

Most good lumberyards carry pine and redwood, some maple, oak, walnut, and mahogany. When you need something more exotic, you may have to go to a specialty outlet. However, many big wood supply houses function as wholesalers, too, so if you'd rather keep your business under one roof, tell your regular lumber dealer what hardwoods you need and he'll order them for you.

Lovely HELLEBORUS, Niger ... The Christmas Rose

Imagine the joy of finding cheerful blossoms peering at you through the snow at Christmas time... exquisite Helleborus, Niger can give you this thrill. It actually thrives in snow and cold, blooming anywhere from early winter to early spring, depending on local conditions.

The beautiful, dogwood-like flowers, which seem to bloom endlessly, are large, white and single. Its attractive, palm-like foliage is evergreen and grows about 8 inches in height.

But be sure you plant only Wayside's strain... It is American-grown, trouble-free and far superior. This enchanting perennial develops into large, handsome clumps, producing dozens of captivating blooms for a lifetime... requires no dividing or transplanting ever.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR[®]

"My son is joining the firm, Boswell. He has all the answers, but continue to ask me the questions."

Divorcee Elaine Cowan likes to tell about a tiny water animal known as the rotifer, whose females can produce without males. Whole colonies can thrive without any male rotifer. There's a moral here—but Christine notes that Elaine is hardly the one to be pointing it up.

Grandma Hillis says the person who declares "I don't want to complain" usually does and will—and the next word is always "but."

After Burt Jr. and I returned from a three-day camping trip, Christine asked "What kind of unusual food did you have?" Perhaps remembering my rubbery hotcakes and combination hamburger and fried egg sandwiches, my son shook his head and replied: "It was all unusual."

While watching a plumpish lady at a neighborhood square dance, Uncle Dodd Buckner suddenly was reminded of a sign he'd seen on an oversize truck: "Caution: long, wide load. Watch for side swing on turns."

Our city's freeway carries the official designation of a "limited access highway." Morning and evening traffic is so thick that access to it is strictly limited.

Other people worry about major explosions—the population explosion, the crime explosion, the pollution explosion. I fret about minor ones—the broken-buttons-on-the-shirts explosion, the-house-paint-is-starting-to-peel explosion, the we've-got-to-go-to-another-meeting-to-night explosion.

Ever see a deer near one of those "Deer Crossing" highway signs? It's obvious that deer ignore signs just as often as motorists do.

Fred Randolph expected to live the gay bachelor life while his wife was away, but he was brought back to reality when he fed the canary, watered the houseplants, walked the dog, cooked breakfast, washed dishes, and dropped off his clothes at the laundry on the way to work.

Grandpa Hillis remarks with a grin that although most people now have good homes, comfortable automobiles, and efficient razors, it hasn't hurt the popularity of sleeping in tents, riding horseback, and growing beards.

Instead of a live speaker, we heard a tape at my service club this month. Maybe next time I'll send my own recorder to listen in my place.

Christine's tomato plants produce huge quantities of luscious "fruit" on spindly stems that haven't a prayer of supporting such a load without help. "Using all these stakes and string," she remarked, "I feel more like an engineer than a gardener."

Pat O'Leary argued vociferously against daylight saving time last spring. Now he complains that when it departs next month, we'll practically be pushed right into winter because of losing that precious hour every evening.

Our youngest is perfectly content when we hire a lady to spend the evening with her, so long as nobody mentions the humiliating term "baby-sitter."

Dad Hillis, telling my children about his early days on the farm, recalled how much he misses the work animals.

Present-day farmers, he said, seldom see horses steaming on a frosty morning at feeding time. They lack the satisfaction, at dusk, of watching the perspiring animals wade deep into a cool pond. And, he said, tractors don't nuzzle in your pocket for apples, or take dust baths, or whinny in the snow. The children listened in awe.

When tomorrow's farmers get their work done by merely pushing buttons, will the grandpa of that day yearn to pat an old tractor's flank or hear the roar of a straining engine? If so, I hope someone is around to recall the subzero mornings when the tractor wouldn't start. It will help make him thankful for progress—just as Dad is when he remembers how much care the farm animals needed, and how they toiled each day.

When we move ahead, we usually leave something behind. Progress only earns its name when what we gain is more than what we lose.

The "Hand-Engineered" beauty of upholstered furniture: Henredon is at the heart of it.

The look is luxurious. But the craftsmanship beneath this elegance is even more impressive. For instance, take a good look at the curved back on the sofa above. Those curves have been carefully "hand-engineered" and molded to cradle you in comfort for a long, long time. All Henredon upholstered pieces are hand-tailored in the same way, from the frame out. Then they're covered in a variety of luxurious fabrics that belie their practicality. There are Henredon sofas, chairs and occasional chairs of all dimensions and styles, scaled for the largest and the smallest rooms. (Many Henredon sofas can be made to the exact length you need—by the inch.) That's another of the beauties of Henredon. The occasional furniture you see in the photograph is from Folio Four. It's "hand-engineered," just like our upholstered pieces. It's the only way Henredon will make furniture.

Henredon fine furniture

This broiler-oven thinks it's a $300 stove

Toastmaster's broiler-oven actually bakes the way an electric stove does, only it's smaller. Flip it over and it broils like one, too.

From cakes to steaks, everything comes out just right because Toastmaster uses electric-stove-type heating units and automatic temperature controls (200° to 475°). There's even a window in the door.

And, it's a lot easier to clean than a stove — the inside is easy to get at, the drawer slips right in your sink. For a gift or for yourself, see the Toastmaster model 5231 at your favorite store soon.

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS, OCTOBER, 1967

If you can't face another year of New Math homework and 500-word reports, don't worry. Help him out with The World Book Encyclopedia.*

Help.

When World Book explains the New Math, surveys the work of a living author, or describes how a computer works, your child understands what he reads. And the articles are directly related to what he is learning in school.

With more to learn today and less time to learn in, children need reference help that gets down to brass tacks. World Book helps out with daily assignments—from written reports that require research, to science projects that involve construction. Best of all, World Book encourages children to learn more on their own. No wonder students who use The World Book Encyclopedia at home usually do better in school, and therefore have an easier time getting into college.

So do your homework. Put World Book at their elbow, and you give them the best help for success that parents can supply.

STORAGE IDEAS—ROOM BY ROOM

By Noel Seney, Building Editor

Now's the time to "put it all away"

Unless you own a crystal ball, you probably underestimated your storage needs when you built or bought your present house. You're not alone. Nearly every family we know today owns more clothes, more appliances, more tools, more hobby and sports equipment—more everything than they owned ten years ago, five years ago, even last year.

But don't let everything just lie around loose, or pile up where you can't conveniently get at it. Now's the time to do something about that storage scarcity.

This month, as part of our continuing Home Improvement '67 series, we show you how to lick your storage problems wherever they exist—in the living room, dining room, kitchen, bedroom, entry, and outdoors as well.

You can build most of the projects on the following pages yourself—many of them simply by looking at the illustration. If you need more help than that see page 158 for complete information or how to order working drawings.

GET DOUBLE-DUTY LIVING AND DINING STORAGE

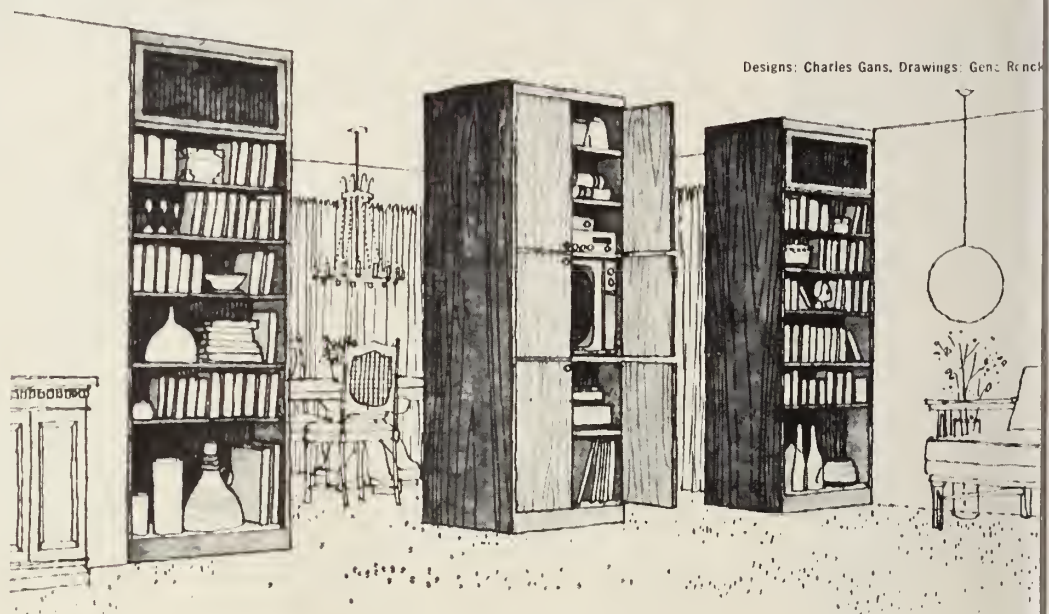

Big rooms need big storage. Here, in an L-shaped living-dining area, three king-size dividers neatly solve the problem by providing eight-foot-high cabinets and shelves for both rooms.

Together, the trio does away with an idle "no man's land" of floor space, yet it lets traffic circulate freely from one area to the other.

With $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood, build each of the units to the ceiling. You can put your stereo components in the center unit and mount each speaker at the top of the flanking sections. Or place your television in the center unit. Or do both!

On the dining room side, build a serving bar in the unit nearest the kitchen. Arrange the rest of the space to hold books, dishes, glassware, silver, table linen, and serving pieces.

PROJECT PLAN 3710-1.
To order, see page 158.

TAKE YOUR CLEANING CLOSET WITH YOU

You'll gladly sacrifice a corner of your kitchen or hallway for a cleaning center that works as well as this one.

The roll-around cart goes wherever you go, and brings everything you'll need with it. Included are places for mops, brooms, dusting cloths, even the vacuum cleaner and its attachments.

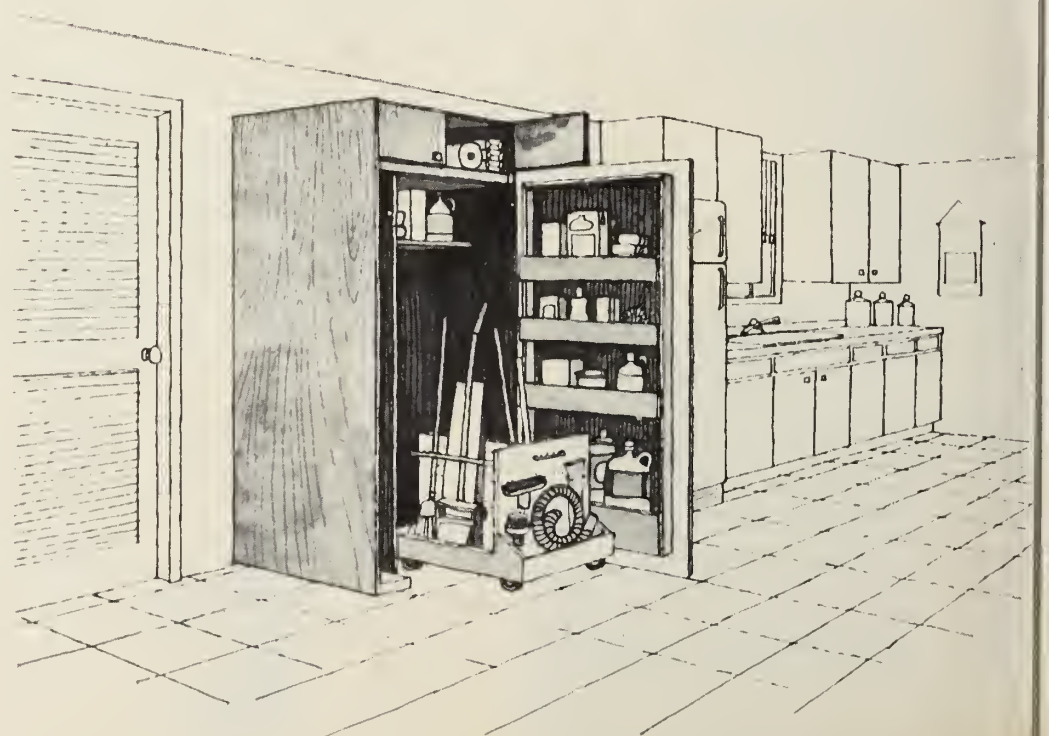

When your chores are done, wheel the cart back inside the cabinet—out of sight and out of the way.

Build the cabinet from $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood; build the shelves from 1x4-inch pine (these shelves will hold your cleaners and detergents). Put a pocket on one side of the cabinet for an ironing board.

Use standard casters for the wheels of the cart. Use $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch perforated hardboard to make the sides. This way you can attach hooks to hold extra mop-heads and vacuum attachments.

For safe storage of pesticides and other household poisons, fit the top doors with a lock.

Sherry's folks had Maytags and 16 kids.

Sherry and Mack just got new Maytags.

Will history repeat?

Back in 1962, Sherry Crookston appeared in an ad about her mother's dependable Maytag.

Now, Sherry is Mrs. Mack Evans Smith, of Wallsburg, Utah. Mack goes to school part time, and works on a dairy farm, so he helps keep the laundry basket full. And so does 6-month-old Debbie. But work clothes and diapers are no problem for Sherry. She has a New Generation Maytag Washer and Dryer.

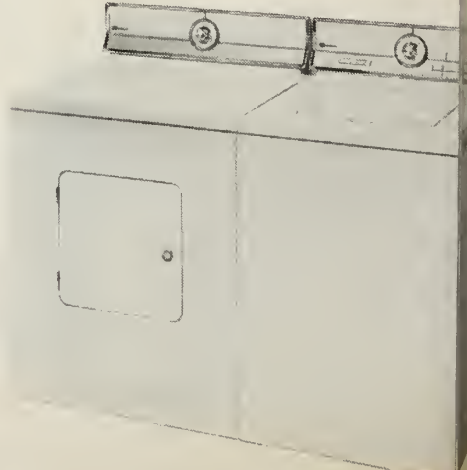

Sherry appreciates the New Generation Maytag features, like giant washing capacity, and Electronic Control drying for permanent-press clothes.

But the most important feature is something she learned about from her parents' Maytags: Hard-working dependability. And that hasn't changed.

Now that she has her own Maytags, would Sherry like to have 15 more kids? Well, at least she's prepared.

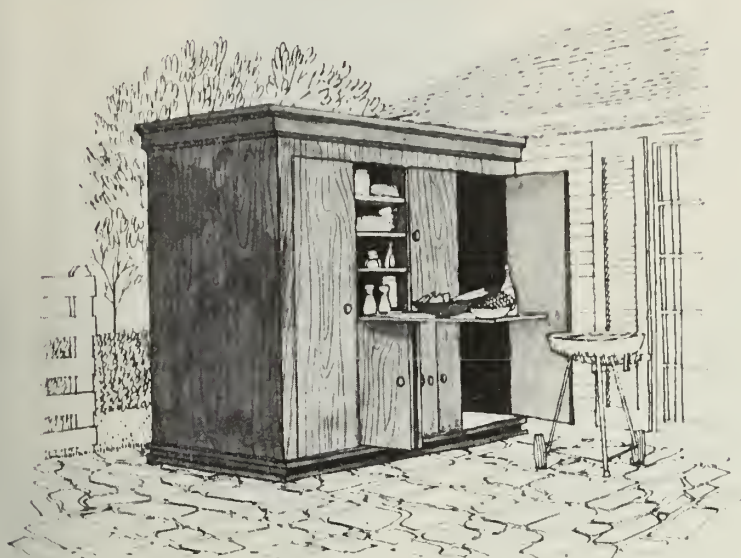

Sherry, now Mrs. Mack Evans Smith, with Debbie, and Mr. Smith.

BUILD A BARBECUE CENTER

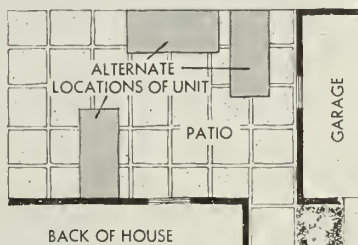

Cookouts are twice the fun around a large, well-designed barbecue center. This one will store all your barbecue gear—including the grill and several pieces of fold-up furniture. The other side stores all your garden tools.

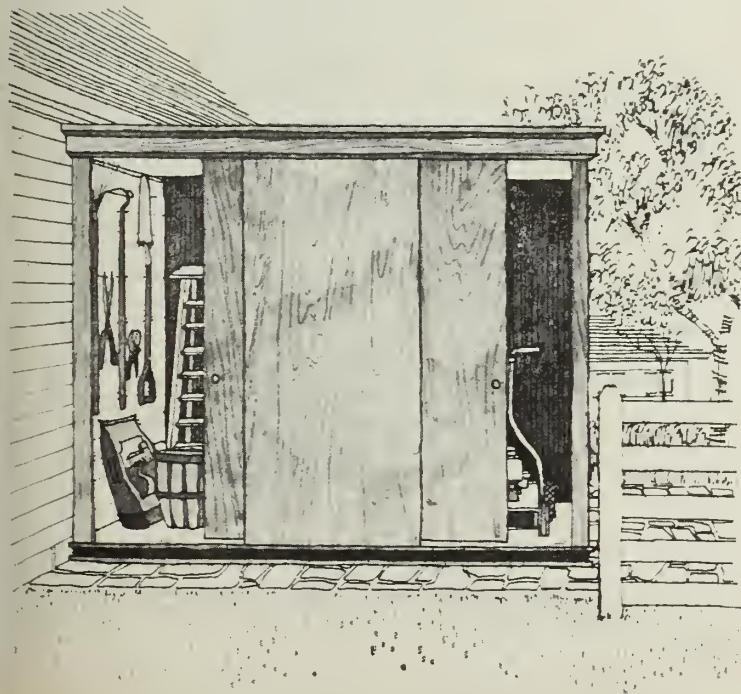

Build the unit from $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch exterior plywood. Build big—this one is 8 feet 8 inches high, 9 feet 4 inches long, and 4 feet deep. The tall doors in front and the sliding ones in back are standard size hollow-core doors.

Build the shelf section in the center to accommodate condiments and sauces. Hinge the door for this section at the bottom so it will swing down as shown. (The lower cabinet doors support the counter.) The drawings show how you can locate the unit for convenience and privacy. Or you could put it at the rear of your lot.

END CLOSET COMPETITION

A man doesn't mind losing his share of the bedroom closet if he can retreat to a wardrobe like this one.

His hats and seasonal clothes fit in cabinets overhead. Hanging items go in the center section—trousers on the left, coats on the right.

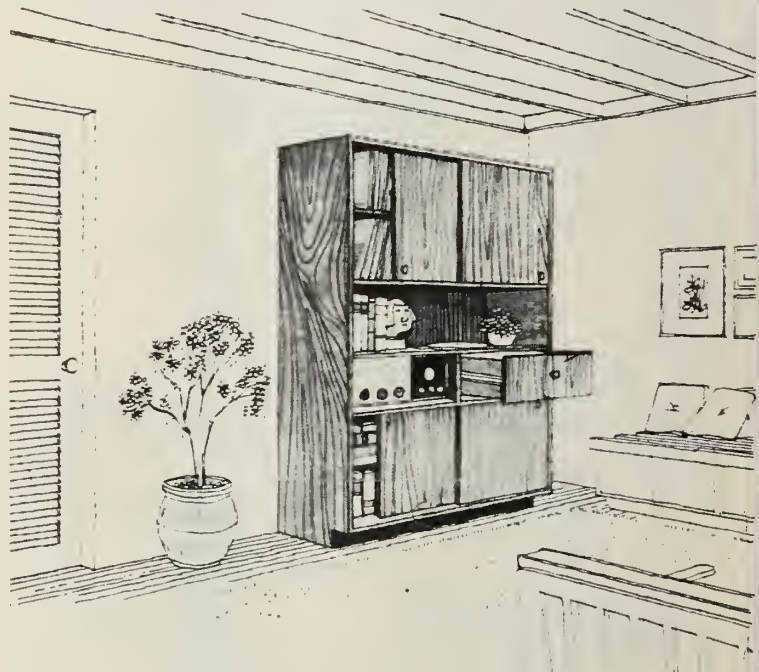

The slotted section keeps his shirts organized in compartments. He can see the one he wants at a glance, pull it out on a sliding hardboard tray. Six 8-inch-deep drawers below provide plenty of storage for socks, underwear, sweaters, and extra shirts.

The wardrobe is 8 feet high and 4 feet wide, but only 2 feet deep to conserve valuable bedroom floor space.

PROJECT PLAN 3710-4. To order, see page 158.

HIDE HI-FI AND RECORDS

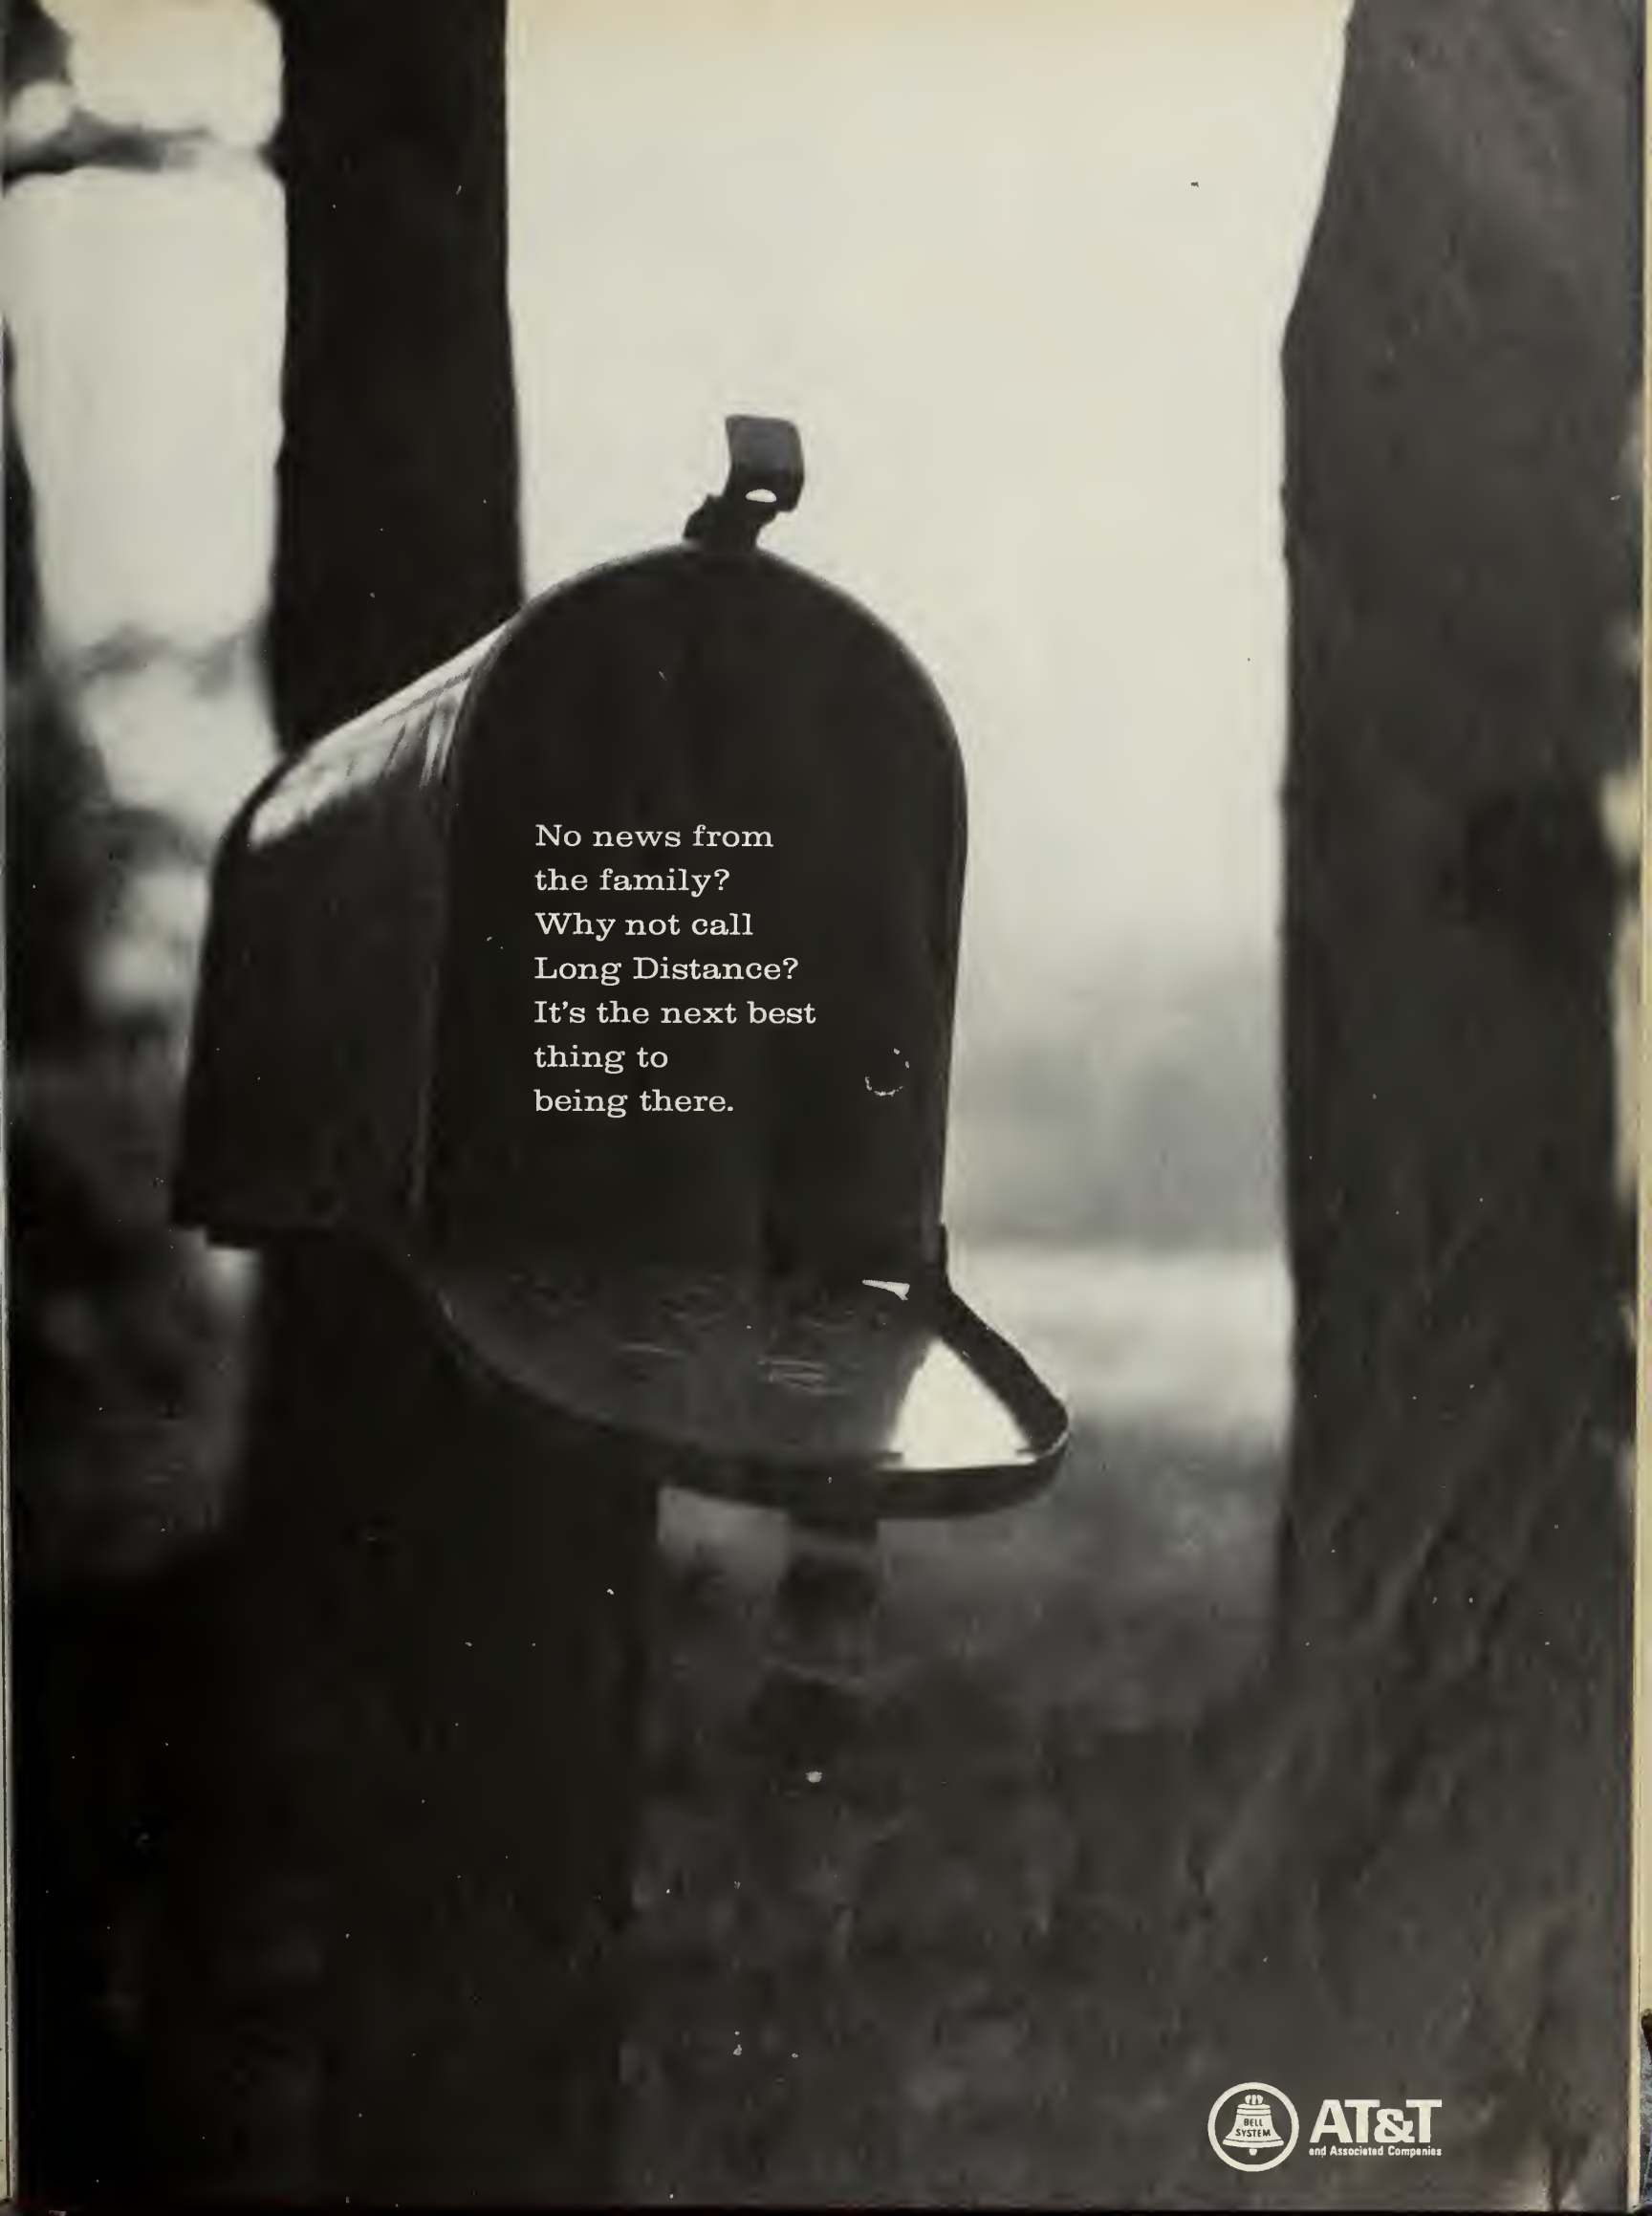

This practical stereo cabinet stores 500 to 600 long-playing records at eye-level, with storage space below. The unit is 6 feet 8 inches high, 4 feet wide, 1 foot 5 inches deep.

Build it from $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch and $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch hardwood plywood. Everything fits together with butt joints, plus glue and nails.

Dimensions in the center section can be tailored for your components. Include a niche for the tuner and amplifier on one side, a drawer for the turntable on the other.

Divide the top unit with pieces of $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch hardboard to make a separate section for each kind of music.

TURN A BEDROOM INTO A MASTER SUITE

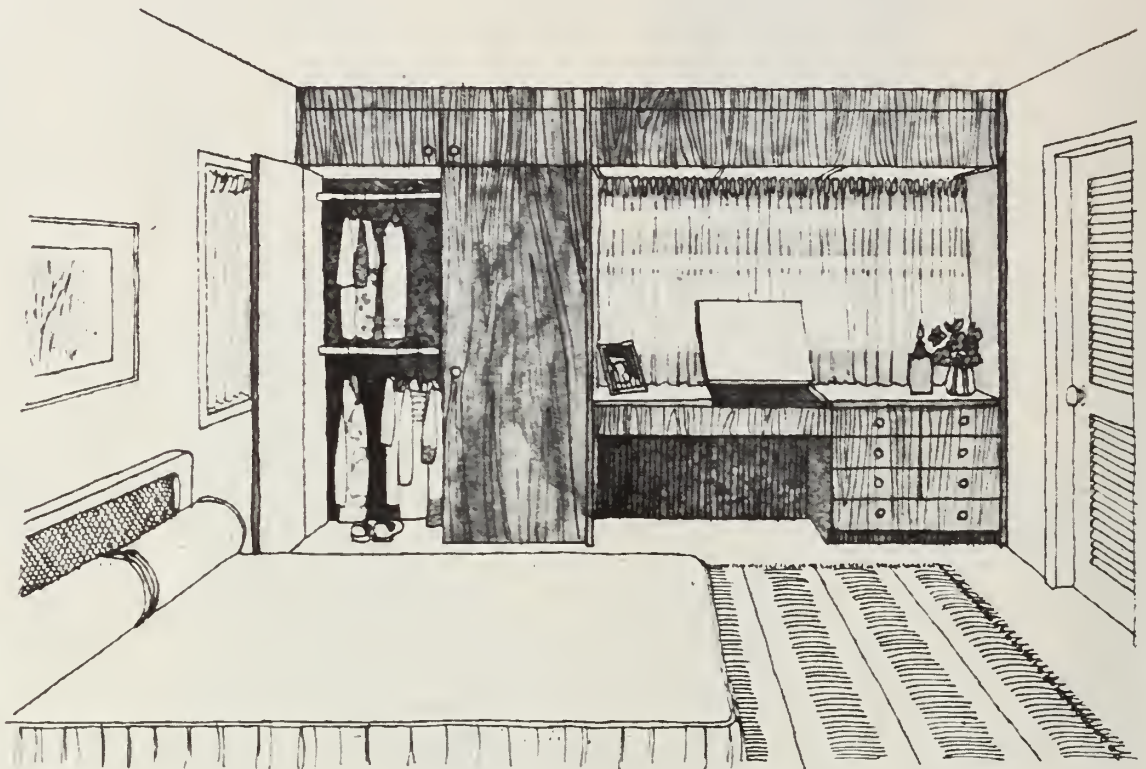

This vanity-wardrobe helps transform an ordinary bedroom into a master suite. It's 12 feet long and ceiling high, so plan to use an entire wall—and disguise an odd-shaped window with draperies in the bargain.

Because this unit's only two feet deep, you don't squander any valuable floor space. Build it from $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood and cover the counter top with laminated plastic.

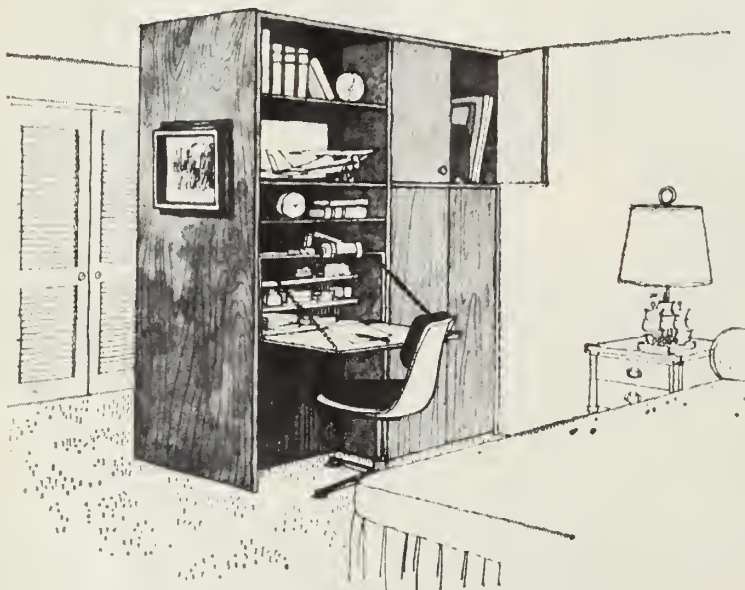

Mount the two big closet doors and the swing-up section of the vanity on piano hinges. Put a mirror on the vanity; the box below makes an ideal place for cosmetics. Flip the mirror down when you're not using it; you'll clean it less often.

Install fluorescent tubes in the light box and cover with translucent plastic panels. Tubes marked "warm white deluxe" provide a flattering light.

PROJECT PLAN 3710-6.
To order, see page 158.

ORGANIZE A CHILD'S ROOM

Any active child would appreciate a storage and work center that functions as well as this one. It supplements existing closet space and, placed between the closet and the bed, creates two separate areas for sleeping and dressing.

The wardrobe section of the unit is located against the wall and opens to the closet side. This creates a space in the room especially reserved as a dressing area.

The unit is 6 feet 8 inches high, 5 feet wide, and 2 feet deep. Because of its height and depth, you can build a substantial part of it with hollow core doors that exactly coincide with these dimensions. Use two of the doors to make the sides of the unit, one door to divide it right and left, and one to separate the desk from shelves and dresser drawers on the opposite side.

Make the bookshelves 9 inches deep and 9 inches apart, but put them on clips and adjustable shelf standards so they can be changed according to needs.

Build the swing-down counter and the shelves behind it as a single unit and mount it on the same set of standards the other shelves are on. This way you can raise both the shelves and the counter as the child grows or is succeeded in the room by other children in the family. You could reverse the unit, locating the desk and drawer section against wall.

the redcaps are coming

They come with the cold territory, those rough and ruddy kneecaps.

And with skirts getting shorter these days, blotchy knees just won't do.

Dermassage does plenty for them, though. No watered-down, perfumed-up lotion, just good medication. (The same kind over 4,000 hospitals buy and use for all-over patient skin care.)

Dermassage is rich in emollient healing agents and moisturizers that plunge deep into pores to soften, smooth and heal flaky, red, irritated, weather-parched skin. Not just on your knees, but on hose-snagging heels and hands and all over.

The new hemlines are up. Be up to the new hemlines.

Soften often with Dermassage Lotion. Or try super-moisturizing Dermassage Skin Cream.

CORNER A SWINGING PANTRY

Appliances simplify cooking, but they often complicate storage. Your cabinets are so full of work-saving devices, you don't have room for the groceries.

End the problem with this roomy swing-out pantry. It's only 2 feet square, but it stands 6 feet 8 inches high to give 25 cubic feet of accessible, corner-size storage. Kitchen crowded?

Put the pantry in the mud room. Interior shelves are 1 foot 5 inches square; door shelves are 3 3/4 inches deep.

Mount the doors on piano hinges to swing smoothly when loaded. The magnetic catch will simplify closing—especially when your hands are full.

PROJECT PLAN 3710-8. To order, see page 158.

PERSONALIZE A CLOSET

Organize your mud room or rear hall with this compound coat closet. Plan a separate compartment for each youngster; build one at a time, and you can add compartments as your family increases.

Put adjustable shelf strips in each compartment and screw several coat hooks into the bottom of each shelf. This will provide each child with a shelf exactly suited to the length of garments and the extent of reach.

Build the individual units from 3/4-inch plywood and fasten them together with wing nuts. Build a common back from 3/4-inch plywood.

Only one foot deep, the closet is easy on floor space.

3 Buick. Now we're talking your language.

We think it's about time car-makers start talking the language of women. And the new Skylark is proof of our sincerity. Take the two-door Skylark as an example. We shortened the wheelbase to 112 inches. This means easier parking. It's more graceful.

Have you ever tried getting in and out of a Buick? You don't have to be a contortionist. New Buick doors are really wide.

All Buicks have the full line of General Motors safety features as standard equipment. For example, seat back latches and padded windshield corner posts. Wouldn't you really rather have a Buick?

Putting garbage in is easier than taking garbage out.

If you're tired of taking out the garbage, put in a National Disposer Model 770C. You won't be sorry.

For one thing, it's convenient. Just drop the garbage in, drop the Magnetouch® Cover Control in place and it starts. Silverware or other items can't drop in while disposer is operating.

Another thing. A National takes even tough stuff like chicken bones and corn husks that other disposers may balk at. And should it jam, the exclusive Reversomatic II® Control will eliminate the jam automatically.

What's more, a National is quiet because it's completely insulated. And durable because the grinding direction is reversed each time the disposer is started, which doubles the life of the grinders. Like more details? See your dealer, or write.

DESIGN A SLEEPING ALCOVE FOR STORAGE

Make small bedroom space work twice as hard. This unit has two deep drawers under the mattress for linens, plus hanging space, drawers, and a shelf on each side for clothes.

The width of the closets can vary according to the length of your wall. You'll need 6 feet, 6 inches of space between them —that's the length of a standard mattress. Hang the doors with continuous piano hinges.

PROJECT PLAN 3710-10

DOUBLE STORAGE SURROUNDS A DOUBLE BED

A deluxe headboard-storage unit solves the extra needs of the master bedroom. Individual dressers separate his and her grooming operations; two closets behind the shelves offer five feet of hanging space.

The unit is 6 feet 8 inches high, 8 feet wide, and 3 feet deep. You can build the major section, big as it is, in almost no time by fastening nine 6-foot 8-inch hollow-core doors together with 2x2 steel corners.

Use four 2-foot 6-inch doors to build the sides of the two dressers, two 3-foot doors to build the backs. Divide the shelves from the closets with a pair of 2-foot 6-inch doors; use a 2-foot door to separate the two closets.

16 things I learned from my wife

...since she started reading The National Observer!

"Barbara is a model housewife. But she's the last person I would expect to brief me about what is going on in the world. So you can imagine my surprise when Barbara began talking about such news as:

1. What Brezhnev's rise to the top means to Russia and to the rest of the world.
2. How sixth graders in Oregon are tutoring first graders.
3. What Cubans mean when they say, "Fidel is about the only bit of gaiety we have left."
4. Why, by 1980, a train may get you there faster than a plane.
5. How "abortion states" may be as popular and controversial as "divorce states" in America.
6. Why we may soon have a "memory pill" — and what it will do.
7. Why the Soviet leadership is furtively trying to rehabilitate Stalin's image.
8. How cigarette smokers are kicking the habit with a new breath-holding technique.
9. Why an all-Negro town in Oklahoma refuses to integrate.
10. How a motorist, arrested for speeding, fought his case against the highway radar check — and won.
1. Why a British psychologist wants to give shock therapy to people who drive too fast.
2. Why doctors are warning women against wearing a certain type of earring.
3. How quiet, little-publicized talks between the United States and Russia are yielding surprising results.
4. How a new invention will enable you to roll your car sideways into a tight parking spot.
5. Why a crew of only 32 men can operate the world's largest ship.
6. How looking a person straight in the eye may be the most valid lie detector test.

"Where did Barbara get all of this information? Certainly not from daytime television or the local paper. No — a short while ago, on a friend's advice, she took out a subscription to The National Observer, the national weekly newspaper. I could see the change in her almost immediately, and when I started reading The National Observer, too, I knew why. It really explains the news. Each story is not just a collection of facts, but a fascinating, thorough report that puts all the pieces together.

"Since The National Observer presents national and world news without bias, scare headlines or sensationalism, we are glad to see the children pick it up. Now we're all discussing the news in our house."

Today, thousands of families all over the country are enriching their lives and adding to their reading pleasure through The National Observer.

The National Observer is not a magazine... not a daily newspaper. It is an entirely new kind of national news weekly for you and your family that fills the gaps in your picture of the world panorama. The Observer not only tells you what's happening, but also why.

All the Major News in Depth

Calmly yet vividly, quickly yet thoroughly — The National Observer keeps you well informed on government, politics, industry, foreign affairs, science, the arts, books, entertainment, sports, travel, fashions, education, home and family guidance.

The National Observer is published by Dow Jones & Company, the same world-wide news-gathering organization that publishes The Wall Street Journal. For four successive years, The National Observer has won top awards for distinguished reporting.

Because The National Observer is printed on high-speed newspaper presses in its four modern printing plants across the country — and because newspapers can be "made up" faster than magazines — last minute stories can be included only hours before The Observer comes off the press.

You get more news — and you get more out of it. In its full-size newspaper format (printed on our own special crisp, white newsprint) you often get more reading material than in other news weeklies — not just one major "cover story," but five or six. Inside pages are important news pages, too — there's no "letdown." More than 50 excellent pictures and illustrations open windows not only on the people, places and events in the headlines, but also on such colorful sidelights as the amusing spectacle of an elephant giving his autograph.

Many Enjoyable Special Features

Each week, too, The Observer brings you more than a dozen special features that add to your enjoyment or broaden your knowledge in important areas. "This Week in Washington," for example, can be read in a matter of minutes, yet it brings you up to date on significant happenings. "How's Business?" fills you in quickly on important trends in business and industry.

For Bridge enthusiasts, there's "Better Bridge"; for crossword fans, a really challenging puzzle; for recipe collectors, a gem or two almost every week in "Food for Thought." And for both you and your youngsters, there's a weekly news quiz, plus "Current Events Classroom," a column which brings you news background on topics such as the mystery of certain Unidentified Flying Objects for which the U.S. Air Force has no explanation. "A Chat With the Doctor" brings you helpful medical hints. On the lighter side, "Reflections" explores random aspects of life: the "good old days" when a pocket watch was a major status symbol. And the whole family will enjoy the dry humor of "Grass Roots Philosophy" culled from the home-town press: "Brush your teeth regularly with an electric toothbrush and see your electrician twice a year."

Send No Money — Just Mail Card

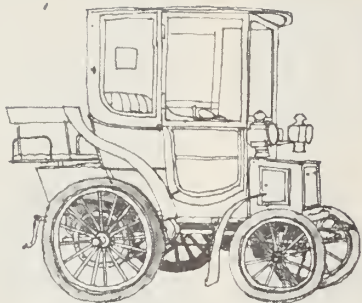

You really have to try The National Observer a while to appreciate how much it can mean to you and your whole family. So we invite you to accept this no-risk trial subscription offer. Just mail the postage-paid card, today.

Special introductory offer: try 25 weeks for only $2⁶⁷ (less than 11¢ an issue)

CARS IN YOUR FAMILY

Duane L. Gregg, Automotive Editor

ORDER YOUR CAR WITH THE OPTIONS YOU'LL NEED

With the exception of the high-performance models, all cars are engineered and designed for normal service. This means they will perform, ride, and handle very well when subjected to normal family use, and will even accommodate the occasional extra weight of a full load of adults or luggage for a family trip. They are not set up for use as a truck or for dragging around a large trailer while loaded down with the whole family and their vacation luggage.

If you are planning other than normal service for your car, tailor it to the job you expect it to do by ordering it factory-equipped with the necessary options. This may mean a wait of six to eight weeks, but it's worth it. Some of the most desirable items are not even available as dealer-installed options; however, the main reason for ordering this equipment factory-installed is simple economics.

For instance, a "special handling package" can be factory installed for from $10 to $40, depending on the size of the car. This usually means heavier springs, shocks, and other heavy-duty suspension elements, including a heavy-duty anti-sway bar. To have these same items installed locally by your dealer will cost at least $100, and quite possibly even more.

If you plan to use the car for quite a bit of trailer towing or other heavy hauling jobs, by all means order it with the factory-installed "trailer towing package." For an additional $30 to $60, you can get such items as a heavy-duty radiator and fan, fade-resistant brakes, heavy-duty springs and shocks, and higher-load-rated tires. You'll find that it will cost at least $200 to have the identical items installed by your dealer after the car is delivered. Just moving up one tire size may cost $30 to $40 at your dealer's, but it can be done at the factory for as little as $15.

These are only a few of the many factory-installed options you may want to consider for your car. You're smart to assess your needs carefully before ordering. In every case, you'll find that having the options factory-installed saves you money and, in most cases, results in a more satisfactory job than having the item installed locally at a later date.

YOUR OWNER'S MANUAL IS WELL WORTH READING

Owner's manuals have really changed in the last few years. They're now thick little books that contain a gold mine of information. Plan to spend an evening reading the owner's manual for your new car. You'll be surprised at the information you'll pick up—information that will help insure longer life and better performance from your car.

If you feel you know all the answers contained in the manual, take the following test. Should you fail to answer even one question correctly, you're due for a session with the manual:

- Where are the fuses located and what size are they?
- Where is the hood latch located?
- How much fuel does the gas tank hold?
- What are the functions of the gauges, lights, and buttons on the instrument panel?
- How many quarts of oil are required for the engine?
- What type and viscosity engine oil should be used?
- What precautions must be observed when towing or pushing the car?
- How often should the chassis be lubricated?
- What tire pressures are recommended for normal driving? For sustained high-speed driving?
- Does the engine require regular or premium gasoline?
- What does the warranty cover, and what conditions must you meet to keep the warranty in effect?
- Where's the jack stored? Are there special lift points where the jack must be placed?

These questions are but a small sampling of what is covered in the manual. It also includes instructions for operating the radio, heater, air conditioner, and other options you may not have owned on your previous car, or which operate differently on your new car. You may even find that your new car has some handy features you weren't even aware of.

Always carry the manual in the glove compartment so you'll have it whenever you need it.

HOW YOU CAN TEST DRIVE THE NEW CARS

All of the U.S. auto manufacturers build good cars, capable of tens of thousands of miles of good service if properly maintained. You might still get a lemon, of course, as you might with any mass-produced item. But the chances are pretty slim, and the warranties are the best ever to protect you against that eventuality.

Before buying any new car, you're smart to test drive several different makes. These test drives may surprise you. There is a difference in the way new cars handle, ride, and react.

All legitimate dealers include a test drive as part of their sales program. But occasionally you'll find that a really meaningful test drive is hard to come by. A 15- to 30-minute pleasure cruise within the city limits can hardly be expected to divulge all the car's handling and ride characteristics—unless you plan to use it exclusively for in-town driving.

To really determine how well a car fits your needs, get a demonstrator that is equipped, as nearly as possible, in the way you plan to have your car equipped.

STANLEY FURNITURE COMPANY
THE STANLEY FURNITURE COMPANY

Take it home overnight or over the weekend. This usually isn't difficult to arrange if it's apparent that you are seriously considering a new car and aren't just a "looker." When you get the car home, load the whole family in and go for a spin. You'll find a big difference in the way it handles loaded compared to how it handled with just you and the salesman. If the car will be used for vacation trips, load the trunk much as you would for a trip and again pile the family in. Does the fully loaded car hit bottom every time it encounters a bump or imperfection in the road? Does it have a tendency to wander, or is it afflicted with tail wag?

Include in the drive some turnpike or open-road driving, some uphill and downhill maneuvering, and some rough streets. And give everyone who will normally drive your car a stint behind the wheel. While they're driving, other members of the family should try different seating placements in the car (both front and rear) to evaluate headroom, legroom, and other passenger comforts. Be sure that the car will comfortably accommodate everyone, that the seats are roomy enough and adjust easily. Is the steering wheel comfortably positioned and convenient for everyone, or should you consider a tilt-telescope steering wheel?

Note the convenience and accessibility of the instruments and controls. Check for visibility—does every driver in your family get a clear, unobstructed view to the front and rear, or are there dangerous "blind" spots for some drivers? If there are more than four members of your family, who gets to sit in the middle of the seat over the transmission hump? You'll find a big difference in the amount of padding and resultant seating comfort here, so check this small but important consideration carefully.

If you reach the point of requesting the demonstration ride, you should also have an idea about possible options. We've already mentioned the tilt-telescope steering wheel. If there is much size variation among those who will drive the car, or if much extended driving is contemplated, a power seat would be a wise choice. Many power seats not only move forward and backward, but also go up and down; they even change the angle of the seat and back to allow varying your position on long trips.

How about power steering? Include some winding-road driving and a few parallel parking maneuvers in the test drive. The latter can be quite critical for women drivers. Power brakes are another possibility. Although they do not increase the braking capacity, they allow you to apply brakes quicker. They also make a large or heavily loaded car easier to stop (they require less brake-pedal effort).

Front-wheel disk brakes are standard equipment on some new cars, and are available as options on nearly all cars. An advantage of disk brakes is the reduction of brake fade, which is caused by prolonged or heavy braking such as you encounter in mountain driving. Also, disk brakes provide more uniform response in normal driving; they're less affected by moisture when you drive through puddles.

If you are considering bucket seats and have never owned a car equipped with them, a longer test drive is in order. They are more form fitting and, in most cases, more comfortable than conventional bench seats. However, if they don't fit your form, they can be mighty uncomfortable—a fact that doesn't really emerge until you've spent a couple of hours behind the wheel. Since there is a great difference in bucket seats among the various makes of cars, try several types for comfort before specifying them for your car.

How about the trunk? Is it adequate to accommodate the family gear on vacation trips? Some models have trunks that look cavernous but actually provide very little useful flat area that can be utilized for luggage. Is the trunk easy to load and unload, or are you faced with having to heft everything an extra seven or eight inches to clear the lip? If you're shopping for station wagons and you're a plywood handyman, measure the distance between the wheel wells to see if there's room to haul a full sheet of plywood.

THOSE CRITICAL FIRST 500 MILES

The first 500 miles are still the most important 500 miles in the life of a car. It's true that breaking in a new model is quite different than it was a few years ago. Then the accepted method was to "baby" the car. Now, all manufacturers recommend more or less normal driving, but caution against fast starts and stops and wide-open throttle.

During the break-in period, avoid driving at a steady, unchanging rate of speed—either continuous turnpike driving or a steady diet of slow-poke, in-town driving. An ideal way to break in your car is to plan an unhurried weekend trip of about 500 miles. For the first 100 miles, drive speeds not to exceed 50 miles per hour—but avoid holding at any one speed for over ten minutes. The next 200 miles, you can drive at speeds up to 60 miles per hour, still avoiding extended periods of driving at one speed. During this break-in period, it's a good idea to accelerate to the speed limit, hold it there for one or two miles, then decelerate to 60 or less. The last 200-mile leg can be driven at speeds up to the legal speed limits, but again avoid holding one speed for extended periods of time. Don't drive continually at top legal highway speeds for at least 2,000 miles.

Keep a sharp eye on the heat gauge if the car has one. (Some models have only a red warning light.) The gauge is a good indicator of how the engine is taking the breaking in. If overheating occurs, slow down. If the condition does not improve, stop and let the engine cool before continuing.

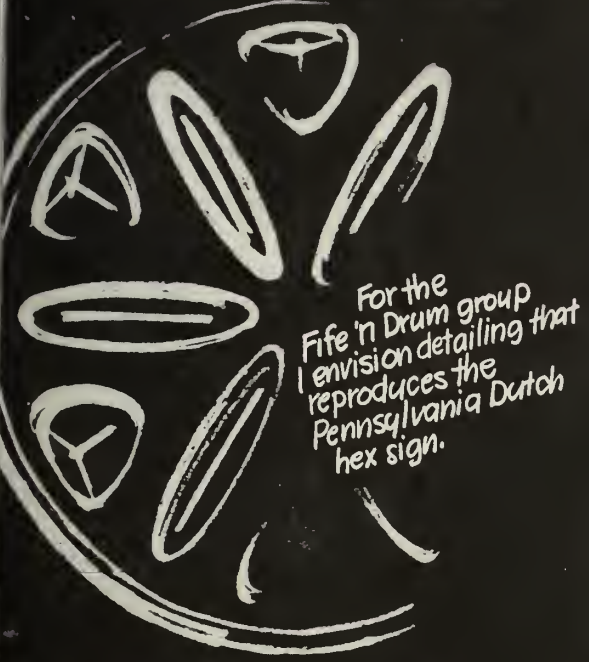

Brakes also should have proper break-in. Pace your driving to avoid sudden, hard, or prolonged braking during your car's early miles. Apply the brakes occasionally and gradually, to help them seat uniformly and to prevent warped or damaged drums. Keep in mind that power brakes are highly responsive, so tread lightly!

Several auto manufacturers, as well as the Rubber Manufacturers Association, now recommend that tires be broken in properly, too. Usually the recommendation is 100 miles at speeds not to exceed 50 miles per hour. (Be sure inflation pressures are as recommended.) This gives the tires an opportunity to limber up without encountering heat build-up. The likelihood of a blowout is much greater if a new tire (this includes unused spares) is immediately subjected to the high heat of normal legal turnpike speeds.

Stanley designers are easy to get along with. As long as they get their way.

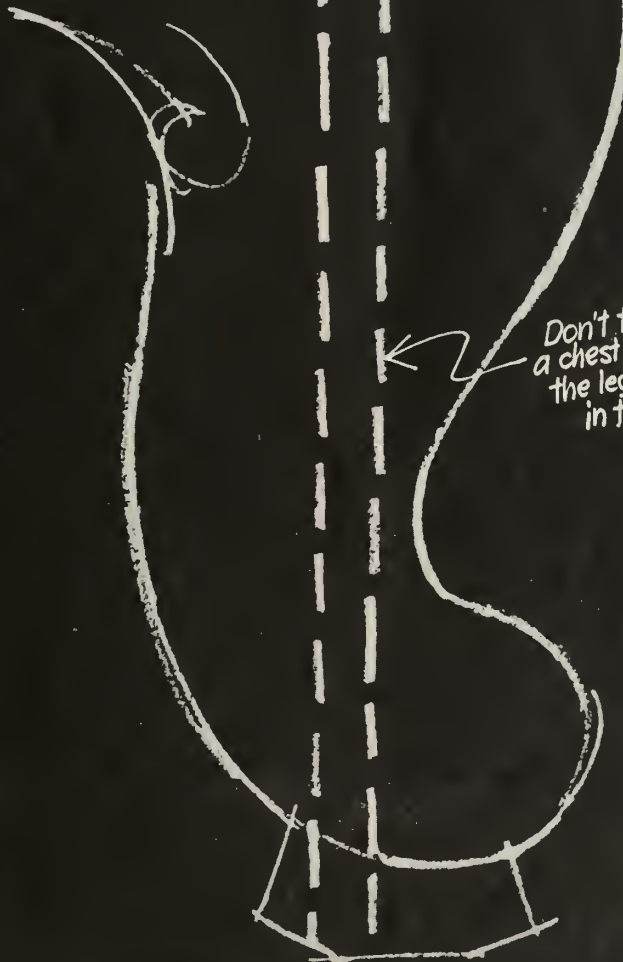

For the Fife 'n Drum group envision detailing that reproduces the Pennsylvania Dutch hex sign.

Yes, I know they have to be specially made. But I think handles shaped like old Spanish pistols would be just right for the Villa Hermosa group.

For the "his" side of the his and hers chests, why not a tie mirror? And since it's a tie mirror, why not make it adjustable to any man's height?

Don't tell me wood won't support a chest as heavy as this. Try moulding the leg with a steel support in the shank. Please.

They design each piece as though they were going to take it home.

THE STANLEY FURNITURE COMPANY

Take it home overnight or over the weekend. This usually isn't difficult to arrange if it's apparent that you are seriously considering a new car and aren't just a "looker." When you get the car home, load the whole family in and go for a spin. You'll find a big difference in the way it handles loaded compared to how it handled with just you and the salesman. If the car will be used for vacation trips, load the trunk much as you would for a trip and again pile the family in. Does the fully loaded car hit bottom every time it encounters a bump or imperfection in the road? Does it have a tendency to wander, or is it afflicted with tail wag?

Include in the drive some turnpike or open-road driving, some uphill and downhill maneuvering, and some rough streets. And give everyone who will normally drive your car a stint behind the wheel. While they're driving, other members of the family should try different seating placements in the car (both front and rear) to evaluate headroom, legroom, and other passenger comforts. Be sure that the car will comfortably accommodate everyone, that the seats are roomy enough and adjust easily. Is the steering wheel comfortably positioned and convenient for everyone, or should you consider a tilt-telescope steering wheel?

Note the convenience and accessibility of the instruments and controls. Check for visibility—does every driver in your family get a clear, unobstructed view to the front and rear, or are there dangerous "blind" spots for some drivers? If there are more than four members of your family, who gets to sit in the middle of the seat over the transmission hump? You'll find a big difference in the amount of padding and resultant seating comfort here, so check this small but important consideration carefully.

If you reach the point of requesting the demonstration ride, you should also have an idea about possible options. We've already mentioned the tilt-telescope steering wheel. If there is much size variation among those who will drive the car, or if much extended driving is contemplated, a power seat would be a wise choice. Many power seats not only move forward and backward, but also go up and down; they even change the angle of the seat and back to allow varying your position on long trips.

How about power steering? Include some winding-road driving and a few parallel parking maneuvers in the test drive. The latter can be quite critical for women drivers. Power brakes are another possibility. Although they do not increase the braking capacity, they allow you to apply brakes quicker. They also make a large or heavily loaded car easier to stop (they require less brake-pedal effort).

Front-wheel disk brakes are standard equipment on some new cars, and are available as options on nearly all cars. An advantage of disk brakes is the reduction of brake fade, which is caused by prolonged or heavy braking such as you encounter in mountain driving. Also, disk brakes provide more uniform response in normal driving; they're less affected by moisture when you drive through puddles.

If you are considering bucket seats and have never owned a car equipped with them, a longer test drive is in order. They are more form fitting and, in most cases, more comfortable than conventional bench seats. However, if they don't fit your form, they can be mighty uncomfortable—a fact that doesn't really emerge until you've spent a couple of hours behind the wheel. Since there is a great difference in bucket seats among the various makes of cars, try several types for comfort before specifying them for your car.

How about the trunk? Is it adequate to accommodate the family gear on vacation trips? Some models have trunks that look cavernous but actually provide very little useful flat area that can be utilized for luggage. Is the trunk easy to load and unload, or are you faced with having to heft everything an extra seven or eight inches to clear the lip? If you're shopping for station wagons and you're a plywood handyman, measure the distance between the wheel wells to see if there's room to haul a full sheet of plywood.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT ACHES AND PAINS

Should you ever ignore pain?

Just being brave and silent can be dangerous. Pain is your body's distress signal, and you had better pay attention. It is foolish, of course, to run to the doctor for every minor ache or such an obvious pain source as a small bruise or cut. But if the cut becomes inflamed or the bruise appears to spread, let your doctor take a look at it. He can head off possible complications.

For pains of uncertain origin, follow this general rule: get a checkup for any pain that persists or recurs—especially if it grows more and more severe.

Your mental attitude toward pain has a lot to do with how much it hurts. Most of us can't just shut off pain by mental effort. But focusing your mind on something else—keeping busy enough to distract your attention from your illness—can greatly reduce the discomfort of prolonged pain.

How to describe pain to your doctor.

Your doctor doesn't just want to know where it hurts. He also needs to know how it hurts. You can help his diagnosis by describing your pain accurately.

Is the pain localized or diffuse? Does it radiate? Wander? Pound? Come in waves? Is it dull or sharp? What makes it worse? What makes it better?

Choose your words carefully. The exact character of your pain is often more significant than its location.

Simple "indigestion" or real trouble?

There's one rough rule about stomachaches. Harmless "indigestion" usually causes diffuse discomfort—more pressure and bloatedness than outright pain. By contrast, abdominal pain resulting from serious disease is often localized and piercing. Sharp pain in the lower right abdomen, for example, may mean acute appendicitis. Focused, localized pain also may signal intestinal obstructions and sometimes (but not always) gallstones, kidney stones, ovarian trouble, and other conditions requiring prompt medical action.

Don't worry if you feel nauseous and bloated after eating too much too fast; the cause is obvious. But if this kind of discomfort occurs often—even after moderate meals—go get a checkup. Your doctor can alleviate these troubles and, at the same time, make sure that no organic disorder is hiding behind your digestive symptoms.

You may get some relief from gas pains with any of the popular antacids sold over the counter in drugstores. Even an occasional laxative will do no harm, but don't take one if you suspect appendicitis.

When is chest pain a danger signal?

Almost everyone feeling a pain in the chest immediately worries about his heart. The most common types of chest pain, however, have nothing to do with either heart or lungs. Even those frightening pains that seem to shoot through the chest from front to back or stab at you with each breath usually turn out to be nothing worse than sore muscles rubbing against the ribs. Such pains are the aftermath of twisting, turning, or some unusual, violent motion.

While muscular chest pains of this sort are harmless, a similar type of pain may be a danger sign, signaling inflammation of the pleura—the sensitive membrane around the lungs. Such pains may be intermittent, occurring only during deep breathing and coughing. If your chest pain persists for more than a day or so, see your doctor.

In the early stages, heart trouble rarely announces itself through pain. Abnormalities that may lead to later difficulties often produce no symptoms at all; even minor heart attacks may go unnoticed. And if pain does develop due to a heart condition, it may show up nowhere near your heart. Here's why.

Pain originating in the heart is often "referred" to some other place. For example, a person may be suffering a cardiac crisis, but it's his elbow that hurts. In fact, pain resulting from heart trouble may be referred to almost anywhere in the upper part of the body. Interpreting the meaning of such pains can be highly confusing, even to a doctor. If there's any suspicion of heart involvement, you should definitely ask for an electrocardiogram.

Is there a best way to deal with headaches?

Most headaches are caused by nervous and emotional stress. Contrary to popular notion, they don't originate in the brain. They result from the tightening of neck and scalp muscles under nervous tension. Such headaches can often be relieved by gentle massage of the back of the neck and the sides of the head. One of the best cures is aspirin. A relaxant drug often helps, too.

This simple routine doesn't work for all kinds of headaches. Relaxants, for example, will only worsen a migraine headache. Migraine headaches are caused by dilation of the blood vessels and must be treated with drugs that constrict the distended vessels. So if headaches plague you often, let a doctor diagnose your specific problem. And if you suffer headaches following an accident in which you bumped your head, see your doctor at once.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT ACHES AND PAINS

Above the age of 40, some people suffer severe, almost blinding headaches due to a strange reaction to certain substances (histamines) in their own blood. Many women in that age group experience headaches as a symptom of menopause. Such conditions require special treatment.

It is widely believed that eyestrain produces headaches, but doctors point out that there is probably no direct causal link. More likely, inadequate vision sets up overall tenseness—partly induced through squinting—which in turn tightens neck and scalp muscles and thus produces headaches in a roundabout way.

Sore muscles and backaches.

"Ordinary" aches and pains, not linked with injury or illness, are usually caused by muscle strain—usually a sudden demand on a lax, unexercised muscle.

The unaccustomed exercise fills the muscle with the poisonous waste product of heavy work (lactic acid). Because of its unexercised condition, it doesn't have enough circulation to flush out these toxic fluids. As a result, the muscle remains poisoned and stays sore until its trickling blood supply slowly washes out the chemical residue of exertion.

Mild exercise relieves the pain faster than rest because it stimulates blood flow and thus speeds up the chemical clean-out. Put the emphasis on mild. Vigorous exercise only aggravates the trouble.

Heat and massage also help, but the massage should be very gentle and the heat moderate. Heating pads or hot water bottles are safer and penetrate deeper. Linaments usually have little or no penetrating depth effect. The best way to avoid muscular pain is regular exercise.

Muscle pain also causes an estimated 80 percent of all backaches. The intricate muscle structure supporting your back gets strained by improper use of the back in lifting, bending, or other kinds of work. Sometimes a single bad move can put a painful "catch" in your back. Habitual misuse of the back eventually gets the whole muscle fabric so tangled as to cause chronic and sometimes disabling pain.

Aspirin, heat application, and massage may give some degree of immediate relief, but a permanent cure requires gradual reeducation of your balky frame. A doctor with special knowledge in this field can usually prescribe a program of corrective exercises. Properly fitted shoes are also important in relieving back strain.

A minority of chronic backaches involve abnormalities in the structure of the spine. If the supporting muscles are weak, parts of the back structure may give way under the prolonged strain of the upright stance or under some sudden load. This results in a so-called slipped disk, causing extreme pain by pressure on the sciatic nerve to travel down the nerve path toward severely limits leg movement. This requires medical attention. Usually it takes drugs, heat, and massage, and by a brace. In extreme cases, surgery.

Older people sometimes suffer back pain because of gradual clogging of blood vessels in the spine. This trouble may express itself in the form of osteoarthritis. In women beyond the menopause, the condition sometimes causes bone changes which may be along with posture changes. Hormone

Somebody had to break the rules.

Suddenly, you could have heard a pin drop on the sidewalk. Making its debut on Fifth Avenue was the world's first mini skirt.

The woman who wore it broke the rules, alright. And so did Dash.

We've created a breakthrough detergent for automatic washers. But to do it we had to break the rules.

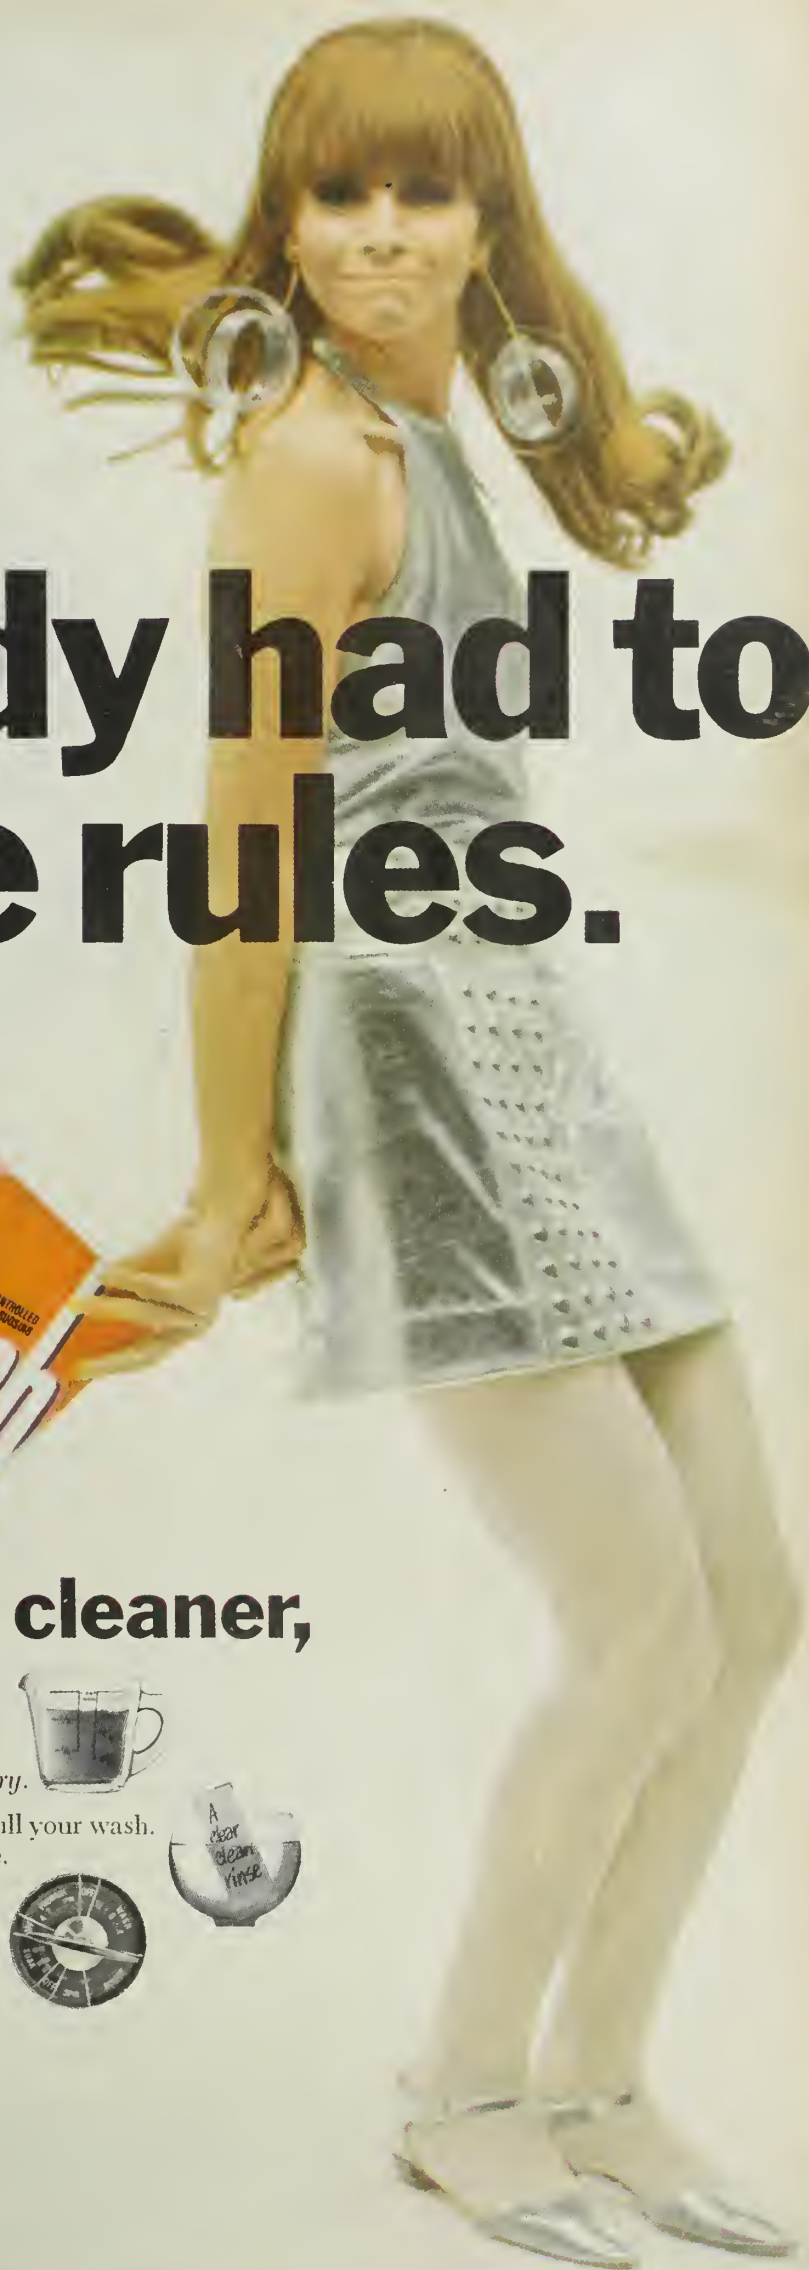

To change things for the cleaner, Dash broke the rules:

1 Where conventional detergents recommend you start with $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups per washload, it's only a $\frac{3}{4}$ cup with Dash. Concentrated fury.

2 Typical detergents whip up lots of suds. But excess suds can dull your wash. So Dash cut down on suds to give your clothes a clear, clean rinse.

3 Traditional detergents are for use in sinks, tubs, pails and everywhere else under the sun. But Dash is only for automatics. After all, that's where you wash your clothes. And so that's where Dash concentrates its talents.

No wonder Dash cleans better than any powder made for all automatics.

AN EASY WAY TO ADD A FIREPLACE

Photograph: Hedrich-Blessing Data: Roger Bracy

Everyone loves a fireplace. Until recently, however, the cost of having one has been relatively high. Today, thanks to the wide variety of commercial hearths available, you can go out and buy a fireplace that suits both your fancy and your pocketbook. If you wish, you can go a step further and give your store-bought model a personal touch or two.

This commercial model is a replica of the Franklin stove. It comes with legs and can be adapted to burn coal, charcoal, wood, or gas logs. A choice of chimney attachments lets you pipe the smoke up through the roof or straight out the back. Should you ever want to use the unit as a stove you'd simply close the bifold doors.

The custom effect was achieved by mounting the stove in a facade of old, red brick. You could hire a mason to lay the brick or, if you're handy with mortar and trowel, lay them yourself. The brickwork enhances the stove's traditional appearance and creates recesses that are perfect for storing books or displaying collectibles.

HOW TO BUY A MATTRESS

You're moving. Or you're getting married. Or you've had a mattress so long you're anxious to junk it for a new one. All the major department stores are advertising "tremendous sales" of mattresses. Should you go to such sales? Or is the merchandise likely to be soiled or inferior?

FACT: Because most stores carry a limited stock of mattresses, the retailer generally buys special merchandise for the sale. Remember, stores don't last long if they offer inferior merchandise, even on sale—so if it's a reputable store, you can trust them to be offering reliable merchandise.

What makes buying a mattress difficult is that the quality of the product is built inside—where you can't see it. Quality is particularly important because you want a mattress to give healthful support—and long service, too.

The most expensive SALE choice is a "75x84-inch curled air and cotton felt innerspring unit, plus two box springs," reduced from $479 to under $300. The least expensive is a foam firm mattress set with cotton woven striped ticking and matching box spring," available in 30-inch to 39-inch sizes, reduced from $109 to $78. The cheap sounds as good as the costly, so how can you decide?

FACT: If you want a good mattress that lasts a long time, you'll need a great deal more information than the ad copy claims. You should realize, for instance, that the quilting and quality of the ticking can add from $10 to $20 to the price of a mattress. However, both supply more than good looks alone. High-quality ticking wears longer. Quilting has a functional advantage because it holds the top layer of upholstery and filling in place so it won't shift in use.

When you see "foam" mattresses advertised for a low price, be sure you know what you're buying. They could be made of urethane foam, which is often confused with latex foam. The difference is that latex foam is a slab of 100 percent pure rubber with honeycomb or pincore-size holes—urethane foam is a solid plastic slab without holes. Urethane foam can be equally satisfactory to sleep on, but it is generally not as expensive as latex foam. Some "foam rubber" mattresses sold at very low prices are actually foam flakes, not a latex slab. In time these foam flake mattresses become lumpy and uncomfortable to sleep on because the flakes slump together.

Chances are, you won't get much enlightenment when you arrive at the store. Most mattress salesmen make the purchase seem deceptively simple. They do this largely by not volunteering any information. Often they'll even let you come in, shop around, and leave without once taking the important lie-down test.

FACT: You must satisfy yourself about the sleep-ability of a mattress, no matter whether it is latex or urethane foam, or well-

HOW TO BUY A MATTRESS

...tied and cushioned steel coil innerspring. But unless you sleep sitting up, there is only one way to judge a mattress for comfort, firmness, and size—and that isn't by patting it delicately. Lie down on it and stay put, however conspicuous you might feel, until comfort or discomfort tells your whole body, but especially your back, whether or not the mattress is the right one for you. In the case of a double, or queen, or a king size, it's important that both husband and wife be satisfied with the comfort of the mattress.

While most mattress salesmen, as we've said, are stingy with information, you just might encounter one of those old-smoothy salesmen who grew up in the mattress business and won't let you out of the store without forcing facts and demonstrations on you. In case you don't know exactly what you want, he will help you decide by asking leading questions. "You need a mattress? Firm or soft?" is his first guidance. If you really don't know which, he will guide you skillfully and irresistibly—to an extra-firm.

FACT: Although many people think they prefer soft mattresses, the majority like the extra-firm once they've given it a fair test. Mattress manufacturers heartily recommend it as the best possible support for your back. However, the type known as "super-firm" is really too hard and unyielding for anyone except a person with serious back trouble. (It's generally sold more for therapeutic or geriatric reasons than for conventional sleeping conditions.)

"You'll know if your mattress is too soft for you," the salesman explains. "You feel like a twisted pretzel when you get out of bed in the morning." Troubled by backaches, vague constrictions about your lungs, traces of rust and squeaks in your muscles and joints? It matters not what other causes might account for such symptoms, such as plain aging! An old-smoothy salesman will convince you that the fault is with your flabby old mattress, and that the cure is the most expensive new innerspring on the department-store floor. Should you trust him?

FACT: If you've ever had a bad mattress, analyze its faults and don't repeat the same mistakes twice. Even some innersprings fail in their function because the coils have not been tied, wrapped, or padded properly. Within a short time, perhaps only a year, you're sleeping on noisy and uncomfortable bumps—in other words, on sprung springs. But an innerspring that is properly made (and this runs into well-invested money) should last at least 20-odd years. Some authorities have even suggested 30 years, but this is probably too much to expect from a mattress. While the construction might not break down, chances are the organic material will simply age to a point where it should be replaced. Cotton will gradually lose its resilience simply from aging, as will many other components, including sisal, twine, and foam rubber.

A professional mattress salesman will show you a cross section or cutaway sample of an innerspring: "The best there is for $79.90 in a double size" (that's without a box spring). Its steel coils are wrapped together with metal clamps and jacketed in muslin to prevent squeaking. The upholstery is a combination of other mattress materials—curled hog hair nuzzling the spring jackets, a lining of polyurethane over that, and a cushion of latex foam or quilted cotton on top of it all. He's close to being right about calling this the best mattress on the market. But there are loads of other less expensive, and nearly as serviceable, choices. It depends entirely on your needs.

Once in a while a product comes along that is simply good for people.

Such a product is Vent-Away*

It is a unique part of several American-Standard toilet models. Its function is to automatically expel unpleasant odors which may occur during toilet use. The principle is simple. Any offensiveness is drawn away by a vacuum Vent-Away creates. Down the drain it goes. Never into the room.

Interestingly, Vent-Away operates by water pressure alone. It's built in at the factory, has no moving parts, nothing to cause a service problem. You lift the handle to start Vent-Away—press down to flush and stop action.

Our Compact/Vent-Away model is modestly priced and is an easy replacement. It can probably be installed in about an hour. The installed cost will most likely be less than $150 (colors slightly higher).

A small cost, indeed, for a most considerate product.

Another American-Standard product that is good for people is Stan-Sure*, the new, built-in slip-resistant surface for better bathtubs. The tasteful "Polka Dot" design provides a surefootedness never before possible. (Four times safer than ordinary bathtubs.) Yet the tub bottom isn't rough while standing or sitting. Cleans easily, too. Need we say more.

VENT-AWAY and STAN-SURE...

HOW TO BUY A MATTRESS

Continue

Many people insist on hair mattresses, if only for tradition's sake. Others swear by foam. A store clerk will incline to his best-selling items. One salesman will bluntly regard curled hair as "so thin it hits the springs." Another will elaborate on such virtues as the fact that curled hair "doesn't smell," implying other materials do. "It has its ventilation built right in!" No reference is made to the drawbacks of each type of mattress, or the fact that you might be interested in a few honest comparisons.

FACT: The use of curled horsehair has a tradition, stemming from the fact that before innersprings were introduced (around 1920) curled horsetail and mane hair produced the most resilient sleeping surface that was available. Now horsehair is seldom used. Sometimes a latex bonded curled hog-hair pad is used between the inner spring unit and the upholstery cushioning, and sometimes curled hog hair, stitched into a pad or used loose, is put on top of the mattress upholstery cushioning. In the first instance the hair is used as an insulator, while in the second it is used to make a stiffer, less resilient (and sometimes cooler) sleeping surface for the mattress.

"Foam rubber is thin and breaks down at the edges," cautions the salesman who is trying to sell you an innerspring.

FACT: Foam construction is entirely different from innerspring. The foam mattress, rubber or synthetic, has no springs, no padding, no tufting buttons, no ventilators, and no insulating materials. It might sound less durable than an innerspring, but actually there's nothing to break down, shift, lump, mat, squeak, come loose, or wear out. As mentioned earlier, latex mattresses are constructed in two basic molds—pincore (minute holes) and a honeycomb structure made up of half-inch or three-quarter-inch holes. The mattress cores of all latex are graded medium, firm, and extra-firm, according to the density of the rubber. (The higher the density, the firmer the mattress.) In urethane mattresses, the plastic foam can be stiffened for greater density. Most manufacturers add a rim layer of extra-duty latex or urethane foam to prevent edges from breaking down. Perhaps one of the least known but greatest advantages of a foam mattress is that it never needs turning as an innerspring occasionally does to equalize stress on the coils and springs. Another advantage: foam mattresses are easily delivered or moved, because they can be doubled without suffering damage. They're also odorless, mothproof, lightweight, non-allergenic (important to asthma or hay fever sufferers), washable, and will never mildew, rot, or warp.

Some stores advertise rebuilding of mattresses. The cost on is extravagant. "Save $$$$"—with many exclamations of points just in case you don't get the imperative message. Consider it strictly as a come-on. Once you get into the store the salesman will try to sell you a new mattress.

FACT: For someone with many extra mattresses that are kept in spare rooms or summer homes, rebuilding is not a bad idea. It could save hundreds of dollars in replacement purchases. But if your family's everyday mattresses are failing fast, nothing but new ones will do. First of all, you owe it to your comfort and health to have the best mattresses your money can buy, and rebuilt ones are never as good as new. Furthermore, dependable department stores never encourage rebuilding—not because they insist on selling you a new mattress, but because they believe only the manufacturer can do an acceptable rebuilding job. If you must settle for rebuilt mattresses because of such special circumstances as having many to replace, be prepared to spend at least half the price of new ones for the rebuilding job. And insist that the manufacturer handle the entire task.

HOW TO MAKE ACCESSORIES ADD UP TO SOMETHING SPECIAL

Usually we think of accessories as little finishing touches—but there's nothing minor about what they can do for (or to) a room. Choose and arrange accessories with care and they add life to any setting. Let them "just happen" and a distracting clutter results.

Before: You can rob a good accessory of its importance by placing it in the wrong setting. Many of these accessories are too small in relation to the space they occupy. Conversely, the large chest completely swallows up its small compartment.

After: Fit your accessories to the space available for a look of pleasing balance. Here the paintings, sculpture, and other decorative items acquire new dimension when showcased in an appropriate setting. Wall unit now becomes the focal point of interest.

Photographs: Hopkin

Before: Afterthought accessories can ruin the best-dressed room. Here the paintings are poorly proportioned for the space they occupy, and the tabletop accessories all too obviously were chosen for sentimental reasons rather than for their suitability.

After: See the character this corner gains when accessories are an integral part of the arrangement. The wall display follows the line of the love seat, smoothly incorporating the tabletop grouping. Pillow profusion is now reduced to an agreeable minimum.

"Please, help me find my mother"

Little Lin San has been wandering all day through the streets of Taipei, Formosa, looking for her mother.

Now it is almost dark and she is cold, hungry and frightened.

Our CCF staff worker found her here, leaning against this rough wall. Lin San looked up and asked, "Please, help me find my mother."

But Lin San didn't know her family name or where she lived. So we took her into one of our Homes, and for months advertised in the paper, checked daily with the police—yet never found her mother.

Was Lin San abandoned? Lost? Are her parents even still alive? We will probably never know.

All we can do now is appeal to Americans to help us care for her in a Home where another "mother" will lovingly tuck her into bed every night.

And she is only one of thousands—children who look to us for love and care. Since 1938, Americans have been sponsoring such children, sharing their blessings with youngsters around the world.

For only $12 a month, you too can help a child like Lin San. You will receive a photograph, personal history and the opportunity to write letters.

USE EVERGREENS TO ACCENT... SOFTEN... CAMOUFLAGE... OR JUST BEAUTIFY

By Hamilton Mason, Garden Editor, and Russell O'Harra, Associate

What's so great about evergreens? First of all, they look handsome all year long. Place them carefully in relation to your other shrubs and trees, and you get a balanced planting that never looks nude and stark even in the dead of winter.

Not only that—evergreens are available in almost endless variety to suit any setting. Practically every shade of green is represented in the foliage of the needle evergreens, such as juniper and yew. Many evergreens, despite their name, aren't green at all, but exciting shades of blue, while others are heavily cast or tipped with yellow. Broadleaved evergreens, such as mahonia and euonymus, introduce an interesting change in foliage texture and color.

Shapes and sizes are wonderfully varied, too: tall, short, fat, skinny, spreading, or flat to the ground to fit any landscape situation. This combination of virtually limitless variety and nonstop performance makes evergreens a natural for the backbone of your landscape program. To show you how to set about it, we've taken ten of the most common landscape problems—and solved them by judicious planting of the best of the evergreens. Most types we suggest are generally available; others may require a little searching, but the effect they achieve makes it worth the effort.

Once your evergreens have reached the desired proportion, keep them that way with regular, sensible pruning. Avoid pruning to hard, geometric lines if you want an informal effect. Maintain their soft, natural beauty with hand clippers rather than with hedge trimmers. Evergreens are undemanding—feeding in spring or fall with a plant food specially formulated for evergreens will keep them vigorous and healthy. Spray in late spring and early summer with a miticide to keep red spider in check. When soil surface is dry, water evergreens well, especially those located under eaves.

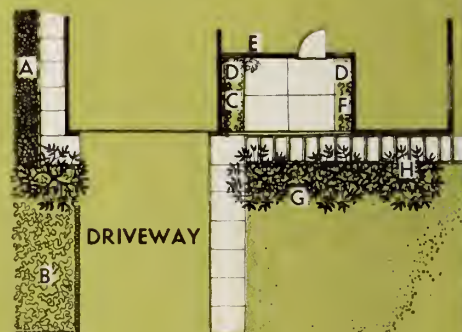

If you live in a mild-winter area, you can substitute evergreen trees for the deciduous kinds we show here: try Wilson's holly, evergreen pear, magnolia, pittosporum, tanbark oak, cherry-laurel, Kafir plum, and seagrape.

TO GLAMORIZE AN ENTRANCE

Pay close attention to your entrance landscape. A well-planned planting makes your house look "at home" on the lot and gives guests and passersby a good first impression. In this plan, good use is made of massed plantings of shrubs and evergreens to the side and front of house, with single specimen plants accenting small entrance courtyard.

Note the strip planting of richly foliaged yew bordering the walk across the front of the house. It works beautifully with the row of flowering crabapples to soften the foundation and roof line from the street view. Yew and a ground cover beneath the trees eliminate hand trimming around trunk. Row of trees also provides entrance privacy.

- C. Espaliered pear
- D. Baltic ivy

- F. Sarcoxie euonymus
- G. Cuspidata yew

TO SOFTEN A HOUSE CORNER

One of the most attractive ways to camouflage the harsh corner lines of a house is with a small, ornamental tree. Add a few well-chosen, strategically placed shrubs and a ground cover to tie the planting into a nice, neat unit—and you really have something! Against the ajuga ground cover, the textures, leaf colors, and shapes of large plants are pronounced, yet still blend into the composition. The house remains the feature attraction here—plantings should never overpower the structure either by mass or intensity of foliage color.

The gently curving brick edging defines the curve of planted area and cuts hand trimming to a minimum—mower cuts the grass right up to edging. No trimming next to house, either; the ground cover puts that area out of bounds for clippers, too.

- B. Compact mahonia
- C. Andorra juniper
- D. Amur maple
- E. Silver Beauty ajuga

LANDSCAPING WITH EVERGREENS

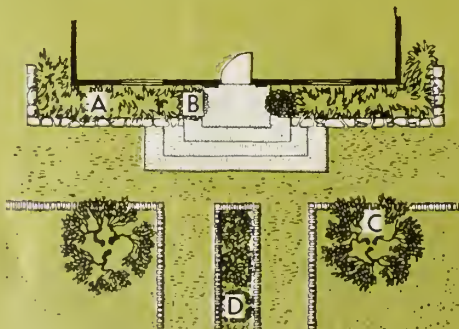

TO HIDE A HIGH FOUNDATION

An exposed foundation wall two feet or more high is often hard to treat successfully with plants. For a typical single-story house, the large mass of foliage necessary to do the job adds too much "weight" at the base of the house to provide good overall balance.

A rather formal solution to this problem (as shown above) makes use of a low planter wall, which by itself conceals half the height of the foundation. This makes possible the use of medium-size junipers which contribute a nice intermediate size and shape between the house and the foundation planting. The low planting centered in the walkway neatly ties together the balanced landscaping. It also softens an otherwise broad and harsh expanse of gravel without adding measurably to the general ground maintenance.

The dramatic front steps, the good basic lines of the house, the imaginative plantings—all work together to direct the visitor's eye to the now-welcoming front entryway.

- A. Tamarix juniper
- B. Boxwood
- C. Staghorn sumac
- D. Manhattan euonymus

TO TREAT A SPLIT-LEVEL PATIO AND SLOPE

A slope is an inherent part of the split-level house, so the way you treat this change in levels is the key to the success or failure of the resulting landscape. As often as not, the simpler the treatment the better. Here, the slope is carpeted with one of the new, blue ground-hugging junipers; a handsome step unit provides access between levels. The placement of evergreen shrubs and trees gives a good spread of seasonal color, with cherry blossoms in spring and masses of golden hypericum flowers in summer.

- B. Japanese holly
- C. Flowering cherry
- D. Juliana barberry
- E. Sungold hypericum
- F. Wilton juniper
- G. Colorado spruce
- H. Reynowtria polygonum
- I. Japanese black pine

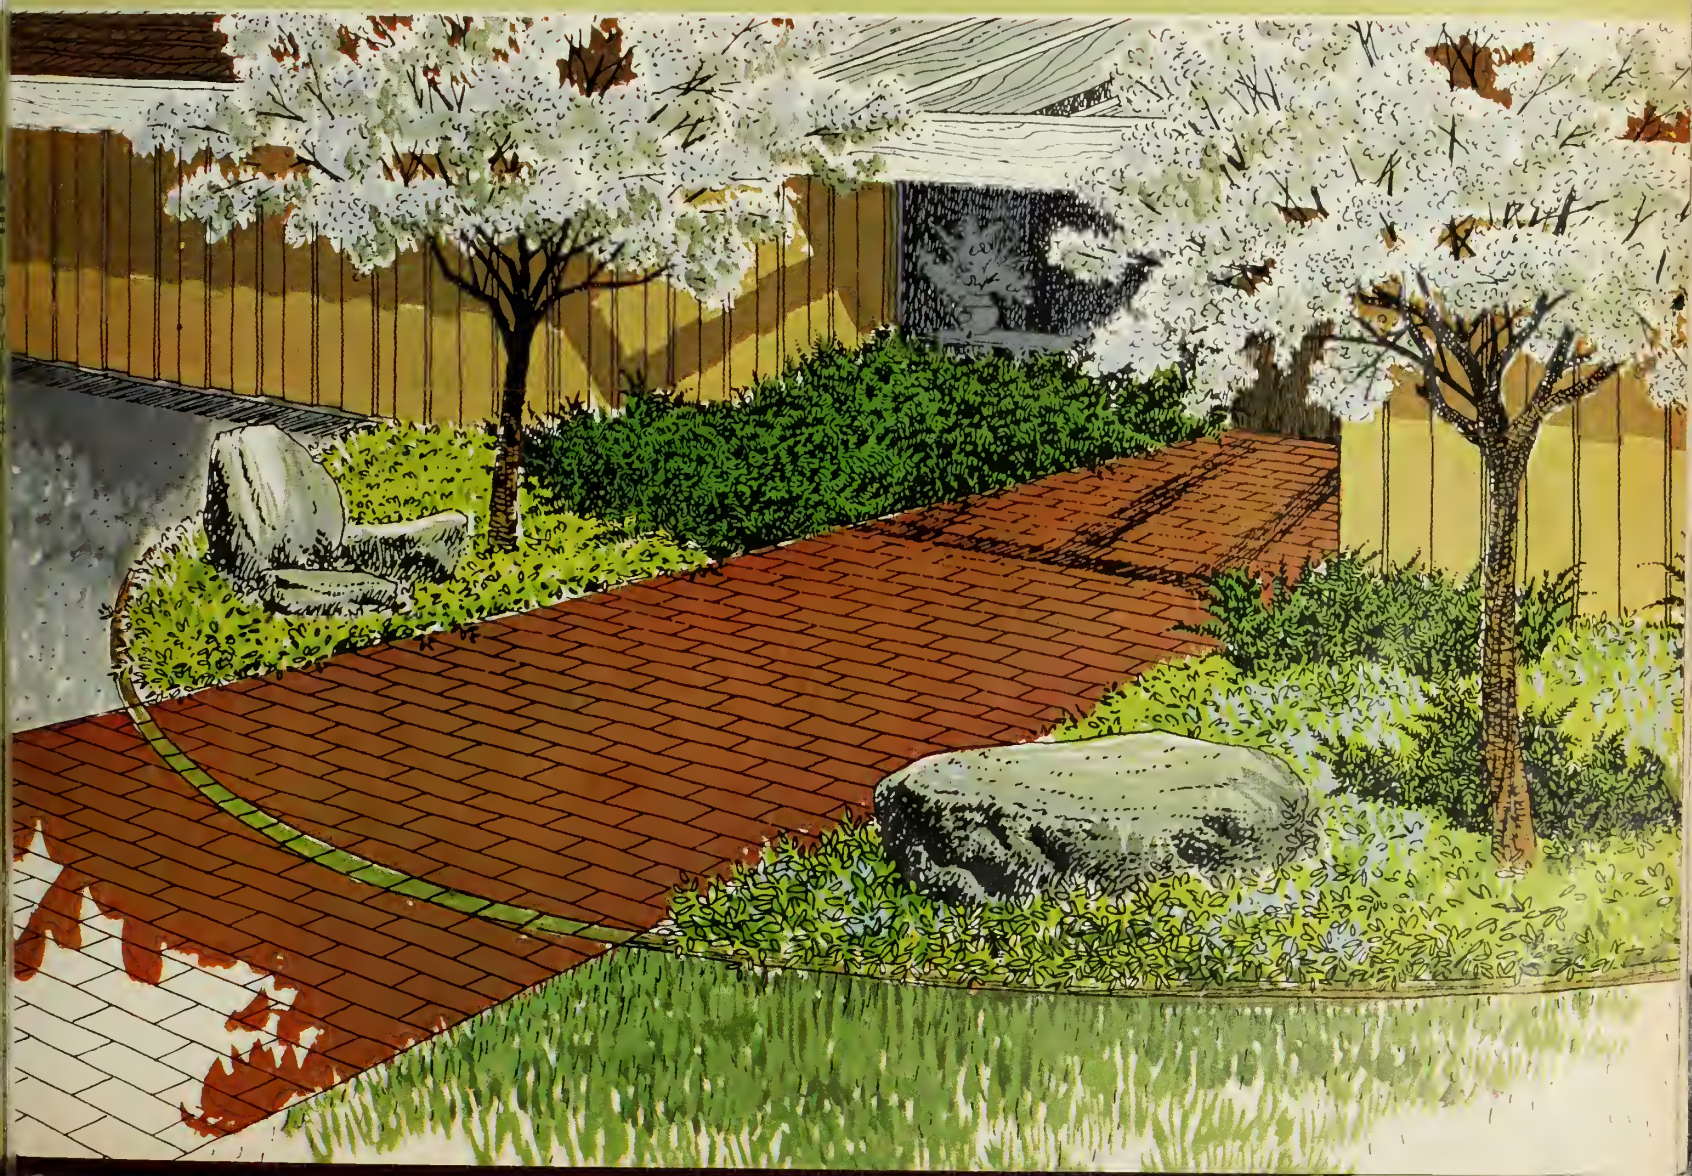

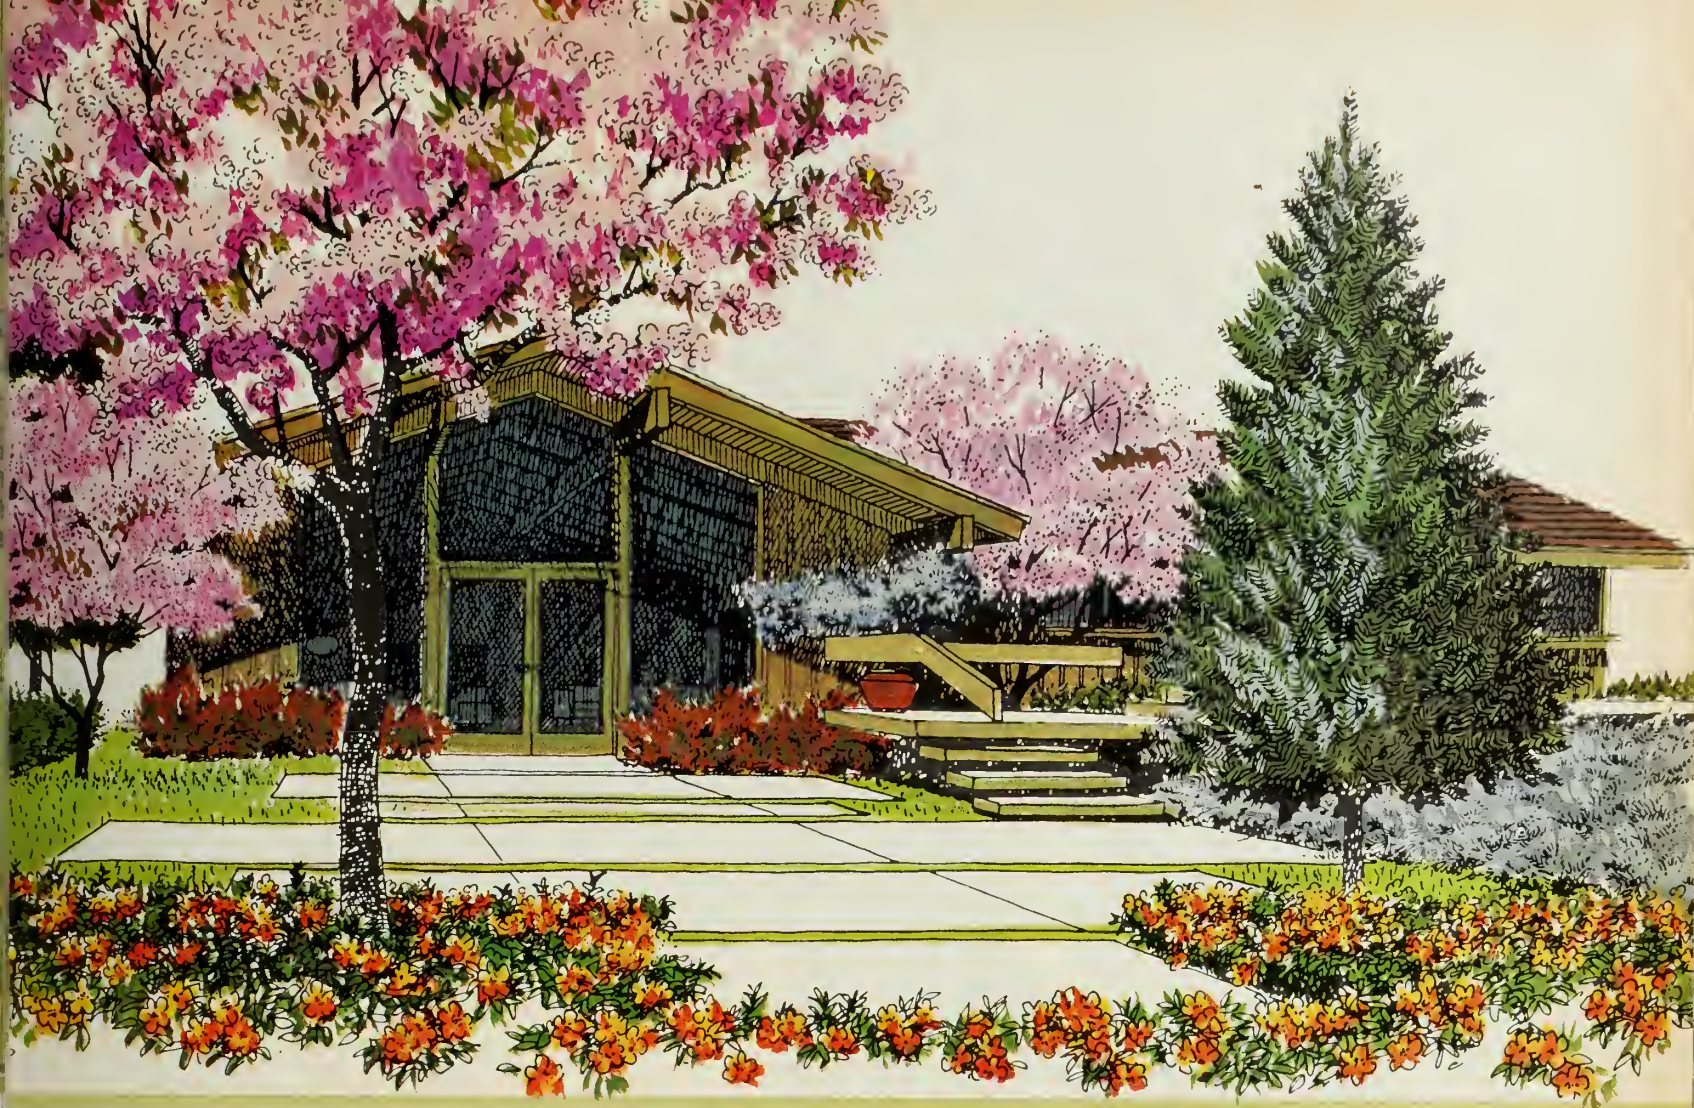

Drawings: Carlos Diniz Associates

TO UNIFY A DRIVEWAY AND ENTRANCE

In a situation where garage and front entry are close together, your best solution is to separate the two visually with plants. Here, plantings fit natural into pockets created by the overlapping design of walk and drive. In all, there are ground-cover areas, boulder outcroppings, scattered groups of yews, and a mass planting of yews which fills niche by the door.

- A. Cuspidata yew
- B. Compact Pfitzer juniper
- C. Chinese holly
- D. Euonymus acuta
- E. Scanlon cherry
- F. Chinese scholar-tree

TO BEAUTIFY A DRIVE AND ENTRY COURT

If lawn mowing isn't your favorite weekend sport, take the cue from this plan and let ground covers provide a fancy cover-up in place of grass. Once established, the low-spreading juniper and vinca require very little attention and give you a most interesting front yard. The upright growth of the Hicks yew makes it the ideal choice for the screening hedges that semi-enclose the drive and entry court.

Here again, massed plantings plus blocks of matched plants result in a pleasing, uncomplicated landscape. But if you mix up too many types, shapes, and sizes of evergreens, you practically guarantee a hodgepodge.

- A. Japanese holly
- B. Hicks yew
- C. Vinca minor
- D. Japanese mountain juniper
- E. Boxleaf euonymus
- F. Bronze Beauty ajuga
- G. Fringe tree

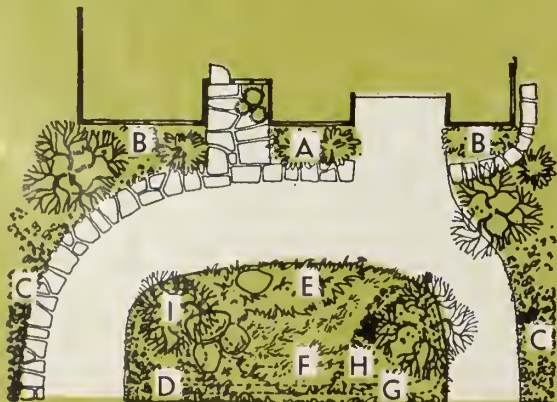

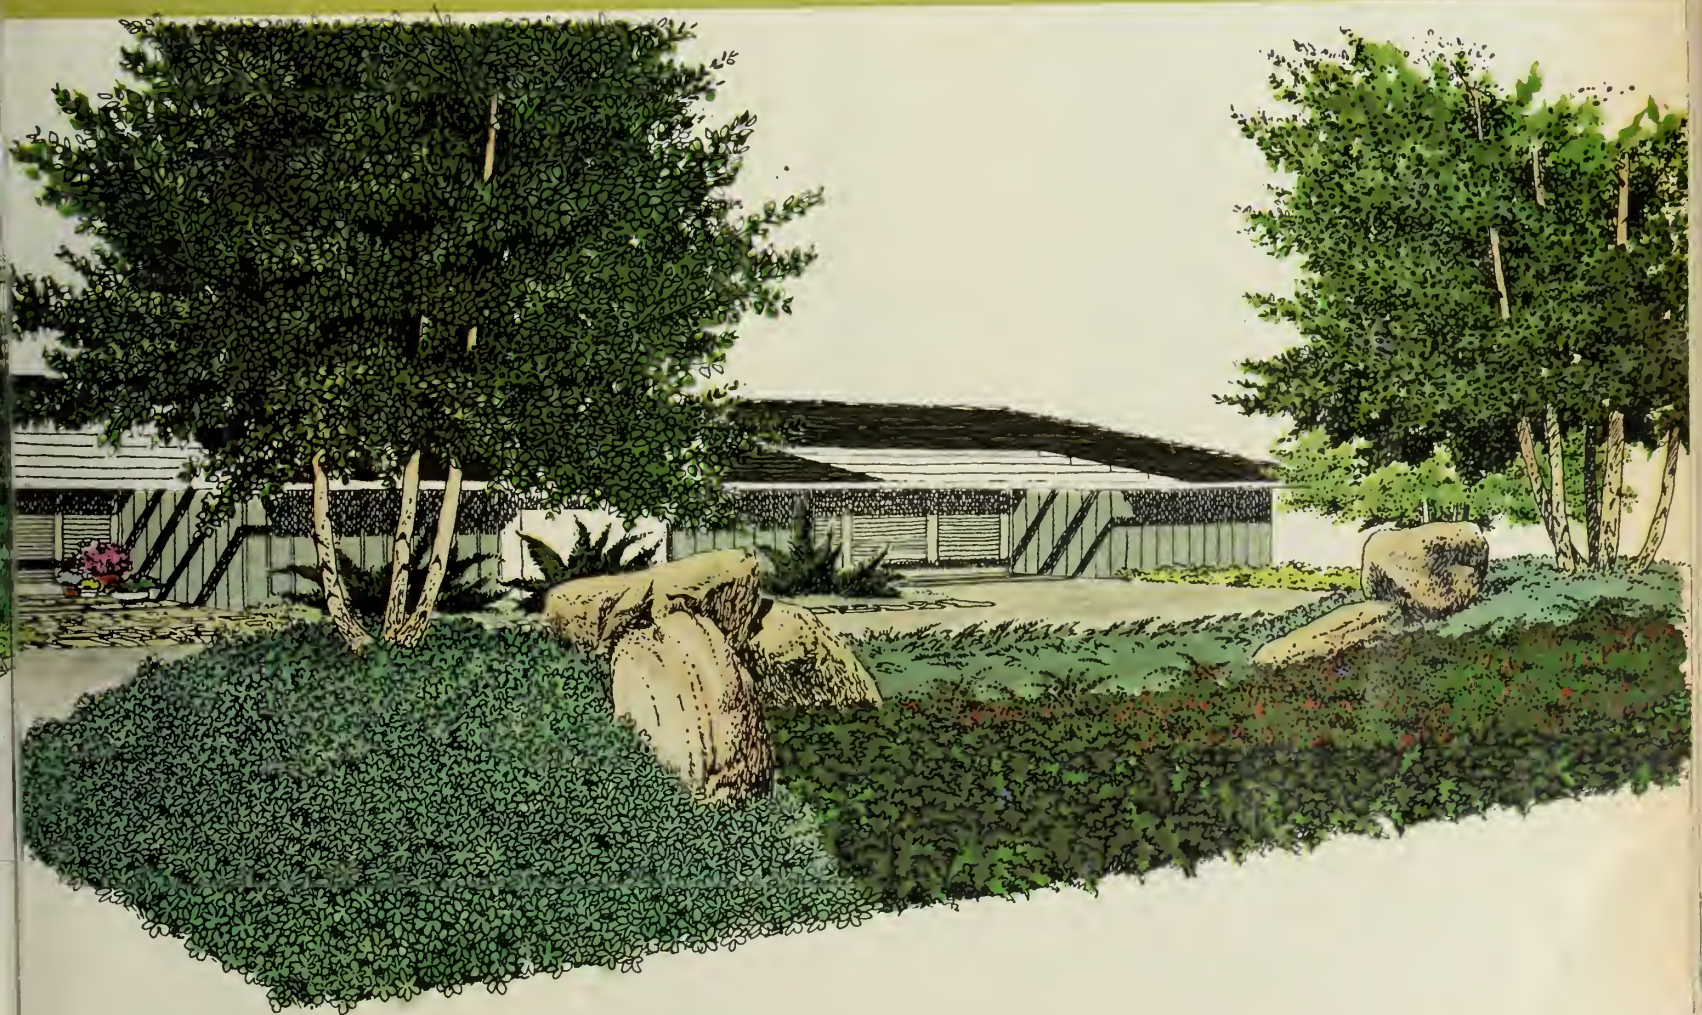

TO DRESS UP A BERM

Near the street, a berm (a low ridge or mound) can really accent a garden setting, particularly when added to a flat lot. A berm also helps provide privacy, buffer street noises, and conceal service or parking areas. Evergreens fit naturally into a berm planting, so use them prominently in your plan.

The secret to a successful composition is to mass large, irregularly shaped areas of each plant so each flows smoothly into adjoining plantings. Place plants so their foliage colors and textures complement each other, and locate those which can take a lot of shade beneath trees. Use flowering plants sparingly if at all.

- A. Mint Julep juniper
- B. Compact mahonia
- C. Wintercreeper
- D. Pachysandra
- E. Buffalo juniper
- F. Ground cotoneaster
- G. Glauca horizontal juniper
- H. Ajuga
- I. River birch

DO SOMETHING SPECTACULAR WITH ORDINARY WINDOWS!

Photographs: Suter, Hedrich-Blessing. Decorator: Beatrice White and Charlotte Garner, Associate Editor

What to do about windows? The readers who ask us this question aren't looking for a panacea such as "hang curtains." They're seeking something special—something to make a typical rectangular window really distinctive.

And that's what this portfolio is all about. In it, we take ten ordinary windows and show how to make each one a standout. You'll discover how to capitalize on a window's good points—play down its bad ones—even hide the fact that it's a window at all.

Some of these treatments are simple—others call for more expertise. All, we think, have that look-again quality you want for your windows.

Left above: Fabric-backed folding screens add stature and style to this window that's also a door. A 4-inch-wide frame made of 1x4 wood strips encloses glass and wall above. End screens are hinged to frame, and each screen is backed with fabric stretched between short drapery rods fastened at top and bottom of the panels.

Left below: Want to take the stare and glare out of a window wall? Filigree plywood panels will do the job, and add design interest too. These slide-open panels are hung on a double ceiling track six inches in front of the window. You can easily conceal air conditioning or heating units behind the solid bottom portion of these panels.

Right: Turn a multi-paned window into a many-splendored one. It's a quick transition when you handle it as one grand sweep of glass. Linen draperies (3½ pairs were used here) connect the six separate openings of the window wall. Each drapery panel (except those at either end) covers the molding between two windows. Continued

Photographs: Suter, Hedrich-Blessing. Decorator: Harriet Bernbaum. Data: Jessie Walker

Left above: Who'd ever guess this trim, tailored, and tremendously smart window treatment began life as a trio of plain roller shades? The custom touches produced this transformation.

A patterned stripe fabric was laminated to opaque window shades and repeated on the plywood valance which coordinates three window panes. Narrow shutter strips add slim vertical lines and also perform a practical function: they hide window mullions and eliminate light seepage between window edge and shade.

For a softer, more feminine look, paint the shutters white, cover shades with a pastel floral fabric, and hang matching cafe curtains from sill to floor.

Shades used solo at a window also take on importance with the addition of decorative trims—fringe, tape, gimp, braid, ribbon, or fabric cutouts. Apply with adhesive and attach near the bottom of the shade in the area not ordinarily rolled up. And don't forget the art of stenciling when you're plotting window shade trims.

Left below: Color in large doses is one of the most effective ways to vitalize any window. Here a vibrant turquoise is paired with an outspoken stripe to give this family room a lively look.

The shaped, cotton-covered lambrequin frames the view without obscuring it. Scalloped fringe on lambrequin and shade complements the white, lightly scaled wrought-iron furniture.

Feel the urge to be a bit more flamboyant? Extend lambrequin to the floor and cover with fake fur. For contrast, add a plain white shade and trim with a narrow braid in a simple design.

If you want to visually increase the width of your window, flank the opening with folding screens. Cover screens with fabric in a bold, bright print, or choose a subdued pinstripe and repeat on the window shade.

Photograph: Reynolds. Decorator: Edward Erickson, The Dayton Co. Data: Barbara Gorder

A wooden frame, topped with standard molding, encloses the window area and extends to the floor. Decorative insert panels are set in the window and backed with a shirred cotton hung on spring rods. Space below the sill is filled in with fabric-covered plywood and divided with molding strips. All wood surfaces are enameled glossy black before the fabric is added.

The finished treatment creates an impressive headboard which incorporates the high strip windows and disguises their inconvenient location.

Right below: A viewless window can be a problem, but not an insurmountable one. Simply turn your back on that drab outdoor scene and create a focal point of interest inside the room.

A custom-built wood frame spans one entire wall of this living room. The graceful arches and fluted columns set a mood of formality. Floor-to-ceiling panels with oval openings cover dead wall space at either end of the long window wall. Semi-sheer draw draperies are hung on traverse rods behind each arch, and the same fabric is shirred to back the oval openings.

For a more informal garden-like effect, substitute a lattice framework and underscore its airy quality with floor-length draperies in a sheer floral fabric.

Another version of this same idea might be louvered panels, hinged to open and close like doors, and topped with a smartly louvered cornice. Hang translucent glass curtains with a patterned design in back of the louvered panels. These panels can be pushed back to gain more light, or to introduce the surprise effect of pattern into a room where solid colors predominate.

Left above: Eyes front! This distinctive bath rates a patriotic salute with no small credit due to the window treatment.

Because windows in a bathroom are often quite small and wall space limited, window shades are an ideal choice. Here a Roman shade of medium-weight canvas repeats the smart red, white, and blue color scheme inspired by the wallpaper. Drawstring raises the shade which folds up from the bottom, accordion-fashion.

If your window is positioned off-center on a wall, you can regain balance with a fool-the-eye wallpaper such as this crisp stripe. Or, extend the drapery rod beyond the window frame and disguise the awkward placement with tiered cafe curtains.

Left below: A wall of glass, particularly one with sliding doors, offers a real challenge. In this recreation room the winning response consists of matchstick blinds which have their own decorative importance and guarantee privacy when desired. Blinds are hung at ceiling level and roll above the glass so sliding doors can be opened to the patio beyond.

To color-key your blinds to a specific room, choose the untrimmed variety and weave yarn through the horizontal slats.

Right: Two small windows in a small area can spell double trouble, unless you treat them as one decorative unit. In this off-the-kitchen eating area, an arched plywood frame hides the conventional shape of the double-hung windows and adds a spark of architectural interest. Practical vinyl fabric covers frame and walls, making the windows an integral part of the background. Black braid outlines the arched openings and divides the wall into 18-inch panels.

Even simpler: hang one fabric-laminated shade over both windows and add a matching valance.

THIS BASEMENT IS PART OF THE UPSTAIRS

By Jerry Reedy, Associate Building Editor

The cozy, finished look of this basement remodeling would do credit to any room upstairs—including the living room. Through careful planning and wise selection of materials, what was once an ordinary, unfinished basement has become an attractive multipurpose living area. Add circular stairs and you've got a remodeling job that not only looks like the living room, but is actually part of it.

An all-out basement remodeling like this one is a major undertaking, to be sure, but not so difficult as you might think. Just break down the overall job into a series of manageable stages; then tackle them one by one.

Above: One of the toughest problems you face when you remodel a basement is the slab. How do you turn a cold, hard slab into a warm, resilient floor? In this conversation area, asphalt tile and a thick rug seem to be the answer. But the real answer lies deeper—under the tile.

To begin, put down a framework of 1x4 sleepers and shoe them into the slab with concrete nails. Between the sleeper glue sheets of foamed styrene to the slab with a waterproof mastic. The styrene both cushions and insulates.

Next, spread mastic over the styrene sheets and sleeper and cover with a layer of 1/2-inch plywood. The plywood makes the subfloor smooth and firm, yet effectively transmits the resiliency of the styrene. Finish with tile. (See fig. 1)

Bulky heating plants and tiny basement windows present two more cover-up problems. The solution: removable ventilating screens built from 3/4 x 3/4-inch slats of vertical-grain Douglas fir. One covers a little window left of the fireplace; the other, an old-fashioned boiler right of it.

The fireplace came with this basement, but the remodeling changed it from a ho-hum accessory to a striking center of interest. Manufactured stone conceals the old brick facade; a protruding shadow box outlines the fire chamber; quarter-tile raises and enlarges the hearth.

Right: A nine-foot snack bar functions either as a separate, self-contained eating area or as a buffet and service center convenient to the conversation area.

Build the bar to complement the walls, but reverse the combination of materials: make the main structure out of 3/4-inch fir plywood; glue rust-painted, 1/4-inch plywood panels over it. Paint the counter top rust, too.

Center the light box over the bar on 2x4s nailed to the floor joists. (See fig. 2.)

BETTER HOMES PROJECT PLAN 3710-12. TO ORDER, SEE PAGE 18

Photographs: Charles Pearson. Architect: Custom Design Contractors, Inc.

Interior Designer: Roger Bullock. Design sponsor: American Plywood Association

Left: You don't find many basement walls with the style and character of these. Large, prefinished panels of Douglas fir plywood deserve most of the credit. Their long, narrow shape produces a feeling of height in the room; their natural wood finish adds warmth. Completely insulated, the walls banish cold and dampness.

Install vertical 2x4 studs against the concrete; cover them with insulation. Run horizontal 2x4s over the insulation; over them, nail a layer of gypsum board.

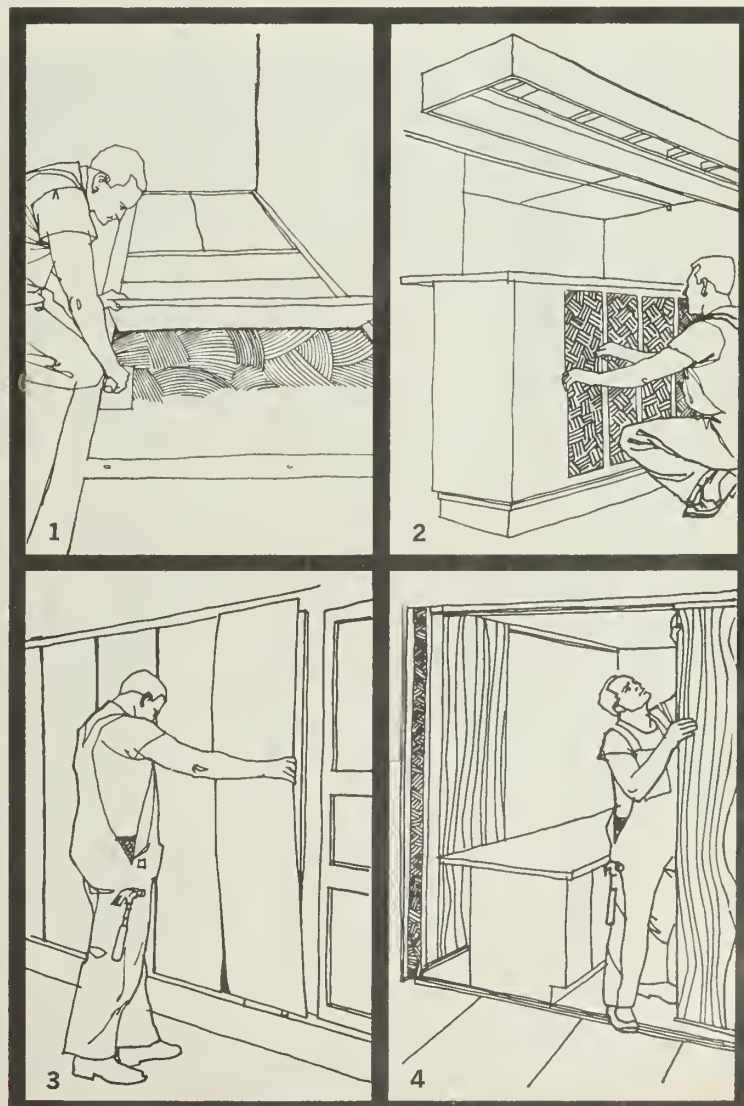

To get the reverse board-and-batten effect, glue $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood spacers over the gypsum board; paint the gypsum board between the spacers a lively rust color. Finally, glue the plywood panels to the spacers. Cut a couple of rectangular blocks to space the panels evenly; use a rubber mallet or a hammer and a well-padded block to tap the panels firmly into place. (See fig. 3.)

Left: With a heated house overhead, the ceiling presents less difficulty. Simply nail 1x2-inch furring strips to the floor joists, then staple textured ceiling tiles to the plywood.

Although the basement was designed mainly as a living area, a separate work center occupies one corner. Sliding doors— $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch plywood covered with bead pattern plastic wallpaper—permit the room to be opened up to the living area or remain completely closed off.

Put rounded wood moldings on the top and bottom edges of the doors. Install four-lane wood tracks floor and ceiling; wax the grooves. Build two pockets to hold the doors; cover the pockets and doors with plastic wallpaper. If you have a post in your basement, consider placing one of the door pockets to conceal it.

With a few modifications, you could make the same corner function in any one of several other ways: as a laundry, a workshop, or a darkroom. (See fig. 4.)

ARRANGEMENTS THAT GO ON AND ON

By Elizabeth D. Craster
Home Entertainment Editor

Winter needn't mean the end of magnificent flowers, greens, and leaves around the house. No, quite the reverse! We'll show you three ways to create long-lasting, radiant compositions from various fall materials.

You'll discover how to keep evergreens dramatically bright and "droopless" long after their prime (why haul up the hedges more than necessary?) . . . create an inspired collection of dried flowers (and display them in breath-taking abundance) . . . or make a permanent assemblage of gaudy autumn leaves and spiral eucalyptus to back up the changing scene of some late fall and florist flowers.

Because these arrangements will last from a few months to a full year, you can afford to devote more time to them than you would to the here-today-gone tomorrow creations.

Lower left: A Scheherazade splendor of dried flowers! Ours were all preserved within a ten-day period, then profusely displayed in an elegant Georgian vase. To keep that look of garden freshness in dried blooms, follow these few rules. Gather a number of containers with tight-fitting lids (covered cake-carriers like the ones shown below are excellent) and be sure they're deep enough to cover the whole flower head.

Sift in a layer of silica gel (found in garden and hobby shops) and lay selected flowers with a half inch of their stems in rows. Gently add more crystals until the whole head is covered. Replace lid and tape around the edges. Flowers are ready when the petals are dry but not brittle. Wire on additional stems and arrange the flowers in a full fashion—interspersing sprays of transitional material such as heather with the fuller blooms.

Drying flowers is a matter of experiment and experience. Colors intensify during the drying process (pink turns to deep red), so you're wise to start with white and pale colors.

Right: Graceful evergreen boughs mixed with colorful bittersweet rise from a bountiful gourd base. To preserve evergreens of all types, use this formula. To each gallon of hot water, add and mix four tablespoons of Micronized Iron plant food, two cups of light corn syrup and four teaspoons of chlorinated household bleach. Pound evergreen stems for two inches and immerse in this mixture. Add more formula daily as the level evaporates. Bittersweet will dry naturally, and gourds may be given a coat of clear lacquer for a decorative look (but this coating will not preserve them). You will find this same formula also works for Christmas trees.

Right: Vivid arrangement of fall leaves, eucalyptus, cattails, and zinnias creates lasting reflection of Indian summer. This time we used a glycerin process to preserve the foliage. In a quart jar, mix one-fourth to one-third glycerin with two-thirds or three-fourths warm water. Remove two inches of bark and cut slits in the stems. Then insert the foliage in an upright position and leave for one or two weeks. At least once a day, rub a glycerin-saturated cloth over both sides of the leaves. When the liquid level finally stops decreasing, you know your preserved branches are ready to combine with other materials in a long-lasting, artistic arrangement.

Here's your passport for a great new Grand Tour—Germany, Scandinavia, Italy, Mexico, Canada, the Polynesian Islands, India, Greece—a tour you can take without ever leaving your home.

You'll like the excitement of these international-style parties, the new taste experiences, the chances for creative table settings. But, fair warning—entertaining of this kind can start something. You may find yourself studying maps with new interest, brushing up on your language skills, and even having your passport picture taken, just in case . . .

To dispense warm hospitality and create the spirit of conviviality or "gemutlichkeit," what can compare with a German dinner! Especially if you serve it from dark pottery and handsome old pewter. Our meal features Königsberger Klops, well-seasoned meat balls simmered in a white wine sauce. You add capers and lemon slices to the sauce at the very last and serve it, with the klops, over hot buttered noodles. Sweet-sour Red Cabbage, whole tiny carrots, rye bread, Apple Strudel, and wine or beer round out the dinner. Serving it family-style adds a special Old World charm, and is quick and easy, too. You may want to pour cups of piping hot coffee, as the Germans do, either with or after dessert. And do try to find a couple of tall steins like those in our picture, to hold Queen Anne's lace or other fresh flowers.

If you translate it literally, smørrebrød means "buttered bread." But once you've eaten these wonderful Danish open sandwiches, you'll agree there's much more to the story than that! They're beautiful to look at, marvelous to munch—much too good to cover up with another slice of bread. Our sandwiches, at left, are Shrimp-Capers, Ham Pinwheel, and Egg-Sardine-Tomato. You'll rate them a great idea for lunch or late supper, with Beet-Herring Salad, Cucumbers in Sour Cream, Caviar-Stuffed Eggs, cheese wedges, and Rum Pudding with Raspberry Sauce. Round out the repast with mugs of freshly brewed coffee.

ON LOAN FROM COPENHAGEN— THE SMØRREBRØD

Create a Hans Christian Andersen atmosphere for your tables! The buffet proper sports a fierce flower-laden Viking ship—to guard the grub, of course! Card tables to seat the crowd wear two cloths—one floor length—the second, a smaller bright-bordered square. Quaint candelabra started out as a wool-winder, to which we added stubby candles and gaudy wooden gnomes nailed to the four corners. Napkin rings are yarn-wrapped paper cores with fancy matches glued on top.

WONDERFULLY ITALIAN —A RAVELLO DINNER

Set your table with bright red pottery and gay geraniums on a colorful plaid cloth, and bring the Mediterranean sun to your party! You can get things off to a running start with Individual Antipasto Plates like the one shown here. Just arrange chilled tuna in a crisp lettuce cup, and surround it with pepperoni slices, a perky radish rose, artichoke hearts, a pickled pepper, skewered honeydew balls and prosciutto, and little cherry tomatoes. To carry out the Ravello mood, you might offer glasses of red table wine. Slim bread sticks fit right in, and they're great with the insalata mista, or mixed salad. When you toss that salad, keep in mind the Italian advice: "A liberal person for the oil, a stingy one for the vinegar, a wise one for the salt!" Remember, too, to keep it simple—several kinds of greens are frequently all the Italians use in a salad.

Make the main course a real people-pleaser: Veal Parmigiana with Buttered Noodles, and green beans. If you want to "go Italian" all the way, offer cheese before the dessert course. And for dessert, impress your guests with Zuppa Inglese, a most elegant layer cake reminiscent of "trifle," a traditional pudding served in England. The name actually means "English Soup," and the dessert is often served in soup bowls—cubes of cake with sauce spooned over. (You'll like our version even better!) After dessert—it's the Italian way—there's fresh fruit and coffee, either regular or espresso, as you like.

You'll hear gay mariachi music when you bring on this showpiece! Liberally studded with chopped almonds which give it its name, Almendrado is a simple egg white and sugar mixture firmed by gelatin. You tint one part of the mixture green, one part red, and leave one part untinted; then layer the mixture into your dessert mold to display the colors of the Mexican flag. Use some of the egg yolks in a custard sauce to spoon over the Almendrado; then add another Mexican accent with cinnamon coffee. It's all a happy ending to a luncheon of Cream of Zucchini Soup, Chicken Enchiladas, and tomato-avocado salad.

FIESTA MEXICAN DESSERT— ALMENDRADO

Buying Guide, page 126

And for that authentic South-of-the-Border table setting—it's strictly Mexican make-believe! We fooled the eye with candlesticks made from dime-store funnels attached at each end with paper cores, sprayed silver and trimmed with pocket mirrors outlined in fringed foil. The paper flowers never decked the raven tresses of any Senorita—ours are whipped up with crepe paper and colored tape. For easy service, try piling cups and plates one on the other for successive courses.

ZESTY CANADIAN LUNCHEON —HALIBUT ROYALE

—and a salute to our next-door neighbors to the north as they celebrate their centennial! Plan your party around delicately flavored halibut steaks, marinated, then topped with sautéed onion and green pepper strips, and quickly baked in a very hot oven. Tartar sauce and lemon wedges, of course, buttered green limas, and hot blueberry muffins. And for dessert, what's more appropriate than Tarte au Sirop d'Erable, or Maple Syrup Pie? It's richly maple, with the crunch of walnuts—like pecan pie, but double-crust.

This cheerful Canadian table involves a bit of sewing for the cloth—a dash of artful ingenuity for the centerpiece—and “voilà”—you can give your own Expo-67 party! The cloth-of-gold cotton cloth has sprinkles of maple leaves appliquéd at random. Handsome grouping of leaves, wheat, ceramic fish, and ruddy apples tumbles out of a run-of-the-mill creel.

Don't wait for a reason—just invite your friends to a hoolaulea (an Islands festival). To keep it easy and relaxed, serve buffet. There'll be something to celebrate when you bring out a platter of Roast Pork Loin, glistening with Pineapple-Mustard Sauce, and flanked by Honey-baked Bananas and Baked Sweet Potatoes. Our Green and Gold Salad is simply mixed greens and papaya chunks, but the papaya seed dressing is sheer Island magic! Exotic ending: Toasted Coconut Ice Cream.

POLYNESIAN BUFFET— A HOOLAULEA

Go ahead—have a party on the rocks! Turning your table into an Island paradise is easy. Just follow our stage directions—and add a few flourishes of your own. For coverings, try matting, rough-textured fabric, or paper that resembles “tapa” cloth. Strew brilliant flowers along the table with a lavish hand. And build a posy-decked volcano of gold-flecked rocks from the garden (add a touch of paint).

When a country is spice merchant to the world, you might expect a fine native dish like Curried Lamb. But this one, we promise, will exceed your expectations! The Indians blend their own curry "compound," mixing spices according to their tastes—but our recipe uses already prepared curry powder. This curried lamb is full-flavored, yet subtle—elegant spooned over a mound of fluffy rice flecked with grated raw carrot. You'll want to offer little individual bowls of the accompanying condiments: kumquats, mango chutney, sliced green onion, raisins, coconut, and peanuts. Complete the meal with Chapatties (unleavened bread), and for dessert, fruit compote.

A CLASSIC FROM INDIA— CURRIED LAMB DINNER

Taj Mahal table setting—concocted with the guile of an Indian fakir! The handsome tablecloth made from yard goods supplies the perfect background for brass bowls and the delicate filigree tracery of Constantine-pattern fine china. Those napkin rings are really Indian toe rings. Don't be afraid of mixing all sorts of exotic patterns and wild colors to achieve this maharaja look!

GREAT FINISH FOR A GRECIAN FEAST —KARIDOPITA

—and Kourabiedes and Tyropitakia and fresh fruit, and strong black coffee. Karidopita, a rich walnut cake, is cut in small squares and topped with whipped cream rosettes and shredded orange peel. Kourabiedes are clove-topped butter cookies dusted with confectioners' sugar and destined to melt in your mouth. Tyropitakia are delicate cheese pastry circles, perfect with fruit. Every bit as great as this finish is what goes before! Moussaka, a ground beef and eggplant casserole, is so special that just a big mixed green salad and crusty bread or rolls make it a real feast.

The glories of Greece took thousands of years to build and decline. But ours are instant ruins! They're made from rolled-up corrugated paper sprayed with white paint, then coated with an uneven layer of flour-and-water paste. Elegant table runners reminiscent of the "Toga primera" are made with notion-counter gold braid on white fabric remnants. Tasteful Renaissance china and Classique silver complete the picture.

STITCH IN TIME FOR CHRISTMAS!

By Margo Garrity,
Crafts and Home Sewing Editor

It's not a minute too soon to get started on the most welcome gifts of all—the ones you make yourself. And these embroidery designs are so delightful, you'll want to make enough to brighten your own holidays, too. Fortunately, the stitches are easy to do so you can work fast.

Brighten a holiday table with a set of four festive place mats. Each one measures 15 by 18 inches. Stamped on natural-colored burlap are the stitches: combined outline, straight, satin, fishbone, and French knot.

Under-the-tree trappings like ours are traditional in Scandinavian countries. The rug measures 48 inches square—large enough to catch falling needles or double as a card table cover. Red ribbon borders outside edge. Simple skirt, 30 inches in diameter, fits snugly around tree base and hides holder.

Stitch a colorful pillow to give a chair or sofa a Christmas feeling. Candle motif on the 16-inch square blends with the corner design on tree rug. After the holidays, just switch pillow to the unadorned side.

Each kit contains: stamped design on burlap, all-wool yarn for embroidering, needle, trimmings, and complete directions.

Apple Strudel

Enlist a helper—it takes 4 hands!

- 3 cups sifted all-purpose flour
- $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup butter or margarine
- $\frac{3}{4}$ cup warm water
- 1 slightly beaten egg
- 1 cup butter or margarine, melted
- 6 cups thinly sliced, pared tart apples (4 or 5 apples)
- 1 cup sugar
- 2 teaspoons cinnamon
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup currants
- Sifted confectioners' sugar

Combine flour and salt. Cut in butter as for pastry. Combine water and egg; add to flour; stir well. Turn out on lightly floured surface; knead 5 minutes. Divide in half; cover; let stand 30 minutes. Cover large table with floured cloth. On cloth, roll half of dough to a 15-inch square; brush with 2 to 3 tablespoons of the melted butter; let stand a few minutes. To stretch dough, use back of hands, working underneath dough. Start from middle of square and gently stretch from one corner to the next until dough is paper-thin, to about 36-inch square. (Don't lift dough too high—it tears easily.) Trim off thick edges.

Brush $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of the melted butter over the dough. Place half the apples evenly along one side, about 6 inches from edge. Combine sugar and cinnamon; pour half over apples; top with half of the currants. Gently fold the 6-inch piece of dough over filling. Pick up cloth be hind filling; slowly and evenly raise cloth making dough roll forward into a tight roll. Seal ends. Place on buttered 15x10x1-inch baking pan; curve slightly to form crescent. Brush top with 1 to 2 tablespoons melted butter. Repeat stretching and filling with other half of dough and filling. Bake strudels in moderate oven (350°) for 45 to 50 minutes. Remove from pan; cool on rack. Sprinkle with sifted confectioners' sugar.

Sweet-sour Red Cabbage

- 3 tablespoons cooking oil or bacon drippings
- 6 cups shredded red cabbage (1 large head)
- 3 cups cubed unpared apple (3 medium apples)
- $\frac{1}{3}$ cup brown sugar
- $\frac{1}{3}$ cup vinegar

A funny thing happened on the way to a better banana.

When you already grow the best bananas in the world
I try to make them even better, some pretty funny things happen.

Like that...er, well...thing you see below.

And that's just one of some 800 triangularaped, flat-topped, red-skinned, orange-pulped, le-flavored bananas we've been working with r the past seven years.

Now we're not claiming to be any Luther bank of the banana world. But as far as we know, re practically the only people around who are ng any work to improve the banana.

And it's paying off.

Our bananas today are a far cry from the bananas they were five years ago.

They're meatier. They're plumper. And they've never been sweeter.

The peels are tighter and sleeker.

They have much nicer bloom. Nicer sheen.

And a generally all-around better appearance.

Now, if we could only get a banana to juice like an orange. And keep like a coconut. But still taste like a banana.

Well, you can't knock a guy for trying.

Chiquita® Brand Bananas.

Whatever you think it costs to carpet your bedroom, it's less.

Carpeting a bedroom floor that's cold and bare won't leave your bank account that way. In fact, you could probably carpet your entire bedroom for less than the cost of your bed.

This is Mohawk's Galawood. A lush blend of Acrilan acrylic and modacrylic pile makes it warm and cozy just to look at. Acrilan® is also what makes Galawood, so resistant to stain and soil. Just an occasional vacuuming will make it easier to keep clean than the old bucket-and-mop routine on your hard floorcovering.

Of course, it's moth-and-mildew-proof, too.

All by itself Galawood lends softness, richness, a sense of quiet privacy to your bedroom. (It will absorb disturbing sounds so you don't have to.) And it comes in a full range of rich, vibrant colors that can really warm up a dull bedroom floor.

You can carpet a 12 x 10 foot bedroom with Galawood for under $100. Plus a small charge for installation and padding. (We recommend Mohawk Cushion under every carpet, so it will feel as good as it looks.)

So now you know. At prices like this, bedroom carpet is something you no longer have to do without.

October is Carpet-Your-Bedroom Month.

QUICKIE SNACK COUNTERS

With a little ingenuity, you can make the tiniest eating area look appetizing and inviting. The two "short order" centers below provide the evidence. One comes alive with a variety of interesting accessories arranged with flair. The other creates a happy and relaxed environment by bringing a trio of lively, compatible patterns into play.

Photographs: Hedrich-Blessing. Decorator: Herbert Altheimer, Altheimer Imports. Data: Jessie Walker

A subtle blend of sophistication and homespun charm provides the zing in this breakfast nook. In the contemporary vein, black place mats and seat cushions played against a white counter and chair frames. And for unexpected contrast, the nostalgia of an antique hanging lamp, old-fashioned coffee grinder, and a cigar mold stuffed with lollipops.

Decorator: Paul Gonzales. Data: Jessie Walker

Buying Guide, page 99

This cozy cubicle turns its back on a busy kitchen to help you relax and enjoy your mini-meal. Three patterns exist together in complete harmony—one in the cafe curtains and matching valance, another on walls and ceiling, and still another on the backsplash at far left. All add up to a different and diverse eating area in a very small space.

American Beauty...British ancestry Britain, of course, is the original home of long-aged cheddar, and we make a great deal of it in England for the critical British taste. But none better than the cheddar we age here at home. Such as this Sliced Natural Cheddar you can get in Mellow or Sharp. Actually we make cheese in 9 different countries round the globe, so there's good reason why our USA-made cheeses bear a strong flavor-resemblance to their old-country "cousins." A large, circular, painterly illustration of a woman with dark hair, wearing a white dress, pouring salt from a blue Morton's Salt container into a small silver cup. The background of the circle shows a landscape with trees and a house. The text "Now? When It Rains? It Pours?" is written in a large, elegant, cursive script across the bottom of the circle.

Now? When It Rains? It Pours?

In 1911, Morton perfected a salt that poured when it rained.
As significant as that was, if it were the only thing Morton had done for salt, it's not likely they would have stayed America's salt favorite for 56 years.
No salt salts like Morton Salt salts.
When it rains it pours.

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS, OCTO

They gave a yell for Annie Thompson... because dirt can't hide from Intensified Tide!

It was getting more and more difficult for Taylor's cheerleaders to keep up their enthusiasm. Slowly but surely their once beautiful outfits were beginning to take on a dingy look. Real grimy. Then Annie came on the scene and introduced those uniforms to Intensified Tide. Suddenly dirt disappeared. Whites shimmered. Colors fairly vibrated. With sparkling clothes to match their sparkling personalities, the girls yelled louder, jumped higher and looked prettier than ever before. Now, any Saturday you can hear them shouting . . . "Hip, hip, hooray. Dirt can't hide from Intensified Tide."

A VERY SMART SMALL HOUSE

By James A. Hufnagel

Photographs: Lisantr. Architect: John Richards Andrews. Builder: Ernest Cook. Data: Kit Tyson

Buying Guide, page 126

This classy contemporary tucks the basics for family living into a 1,700-square-foot rectangle. It includes a king-size living-dining area, kitchen, three bedrooms, and a "bonus" room which has a variety of uses.

Above: Sliding glass doors open up the rear wall of the living room to the backyard. For privacy, the sides are windowless.

Very shallow eaves on the flat roof give the exterior a neat, uncluttered look. Vertical planks were used as siding and for several interior walls.

Top left: The entry—and sliding glass doors beside it—opens onto a long, protected court between the carport and house. What would normally be front yard is a gravel parking area for family and guests' cars.

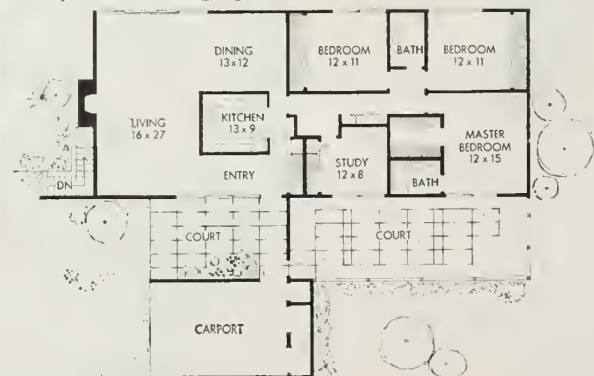

Center left: Almost half of the house seems to be one large room. Partitions that don't quite reach the ceiling divide the space into a dining area, living room, and entry. Behind the partitions is a U-shaped kitchen that's handy to the dining area and entry.

Bottom left: A simple brick fireplace, flush with the wall, breaks up the living room's 27-foot length and provides a natural centerpoint for furniture grouping. In the foreground, along the kitchen wall, is a long bench that can be used for occasional seating.

Plan: Careful attention to traffic patterns can make a smaller house work as smoothly as one that's half again as big. Here, you can proceed directly from the entry to the living room, kitchen, dining area, or bedroom.

The "bonus" room right of the entry can be a study, breakfast area, or fourth bedroom. It and the master bedroom have sliding glass doors and share a private, fenced-in court.

Overall dimensions of the house are 63x27 feet; total living space is 1,690 square feet.

Total Electric Living is a clean break with the past

The flameless electric clothes dryer is America's No. 1 choice for permanent-press fabrics

Makers of permanent-press garments recommend tumble drying as the best way to keep clothes sharp and textures soft. And this, among other reasons, is why American women prefer the flameless electric clothes dryer. It's their first choice by far. The electric heat "relaxes" synthetic fabrics for proper wrinkle-resistance. Clothes come out clean, fresh-looking, ready to wear.

A flameless electric dryer has many more advantages. It's marvelously clean. Costs less to buy. And it doesn't require a special flue, which enables you to install it anywhere you choose.

So why dry outdoors? Why fight rain, dust, soot and cold? Make a clean break with the past. See your appliance dealer about a flameless electric dryer... another appliance that adds to the joy of Total Electric Living.

SYMBOL OF TOTAL ELECTRIC LIVING:
This Gold Medallion identifies a home where everything's electric...including the heat.

Bananas have labels, oranges have tattoos, even avocados are stamped. And now—for raisins—the sweetest little fruit of them all...

(labels for raisins?)

WHY NOT? After all, raisins deserve to be noticed. They're sweet. They're fun. They're loaded with energy.

So we printed up beautiful little raisin labels. Each in striking color, and measuring a full .2187" wide.

No good though. The labels were too tiny to read. And they were hard to put on. And they kept falling off. And the banana people laughed at us.

It was a mess.

So now we have thousands upon thousands of tiny raisin labels to dispose of. Would you like one — along with a free magnifying glass to read it by? Then simply complete the coupon at right (we're serious) and mail it to "Raisins" Department B, P.O. Box 2273, Fresno, California.

CALIFORNIA RAISIN ADVISORY BOARD

FREE Please send me one beautiful little raisin label...plus a free magnifying glass to read it by...(plus a nice little surprise.) I understand there is no cost or obligation.

OCTOBER GARDENING WHERE YOU LIVE!

Norvell Gillespie, Better Homes and Gardens Western Field Editor

Preparation of soil. Gardeners are born optimists. And rightly so, for success in gardening rests on the fact that life must go on, expand, and reach a mighty triumph. With the approach of winter, the true dirt gardener uses this as a time to take stock and make improvements.

No green-thumber is worth a pinch of peat moss if he doesn't respond to such plant-selling phrases as "for poor soils," "like it hot and dry," or most promising of all, "not particular as to soil." That's the tip for him to seek out the plants immediately. Spots with poor or indifferent soil where little grows well are all too easy to find. Such tempting phrases need qualification. There is more to gardening than just popping plants in the ground.

It is true that some plants are better foragers and are more efficient than others at extracting the nutrients they need from the soil. But, the unvarnished fact remains that all plants are in constant need of reasonably good anchorage, moisture, and root aeration. And, at the outset, they are likely to do much better if the area surrounding their root systems is beefed up with a good planting mix and plant food.

Turn the soil in your annual flower beds and vegetable garden with a spading fork in late fall. Your soil will mellow during the winter months and be easy to work with in the spring. Organic matter and plant food can be worked into the soil, too.

Generally speaking, the planting holes for plants from containers ought to be at least twice the size of the container or root ball. This permits the new root tips to expand outward more easily. In heavy soils, dig a little deeper so four to six inches of coarse material can be placed in the bottom of the planting holes. This is especially important for ornamentals, azaleas, rhododendrons, and gardenias.

Position shrub in hole deep enough to accommodate spread of the roots or root ball with the crown of the shrub at the same level it was growing in the nursery. Fill hole to four-fifths full of soil; add water to settle and soak ground. When water has soaked in, finish filling with soil leaving a depression around plant.

Need for potting soil. Come an end to summer and the gardener's thoughts turn to winter. But before he can start houseplant and bulb-planting activities, he has to have good potting soil. He has an option. He can take the easy way and buy one of the ready-made types at the nearest nursery, or he can prepare his own.

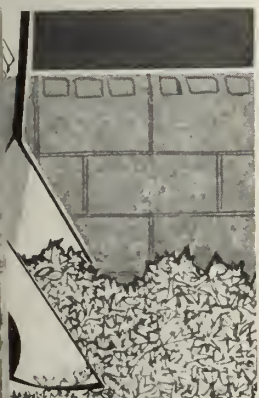

Blend the ingredients of your potting mixtures thoroughly and store in bags or covered containers. Mix small quantities by hand but if you need big supply, use a shovel to blend the components on a large plastic sheet or canvas.

Most gardeners have a formula to offer, but one good, all-purpose formula is:

Combine your bulbs with annuals so you get follow-up color when the spring-blooming bulbs finish. The annuals also help hide the withering foliage. Do go heavily to daffodils since they succeed anywhere in the West. Here are some practical plant combinations to give you "picture combinations" of two or more flowers that bloom together and complement each other.

Blue, white, and golden yellow: Plant bulbs of babiana, the six-inch-high baboon flower from South Africa. Add foamy spots of the four-inch snow-white dwarf alyssum backed up with two or three clumps of lemon-yellow Alyssum saxatile 'luteum' (citrinum) that grows to 12 inches high.

Gold and blue: Place golden yellow daffodils in a sea of blue forget-me-nots. Plant the bulbs, rake the soil smooth, and set out the forget-me-nots over the bulbs. Or, sow seed of the native plant known as baby blue-eyes (nemophila). Or, border a bed of cynoglossum Blue Firmament with yellow or orange calendulas. Colonies of blue Wedgwood Dutch iris would give vertical balance.

Blue and white: Use blue cinerarias for a foreground of white daffodils.

Shades of purple and violet: Try violet-scented, rich purple Iris reticulata (especially great in the Pacific Northwest) in a carpeted bed of purple and yellow violas.

Pink and white: Pink azaleas look great with a foreground of white cyclamen (O.K. outdoors in mild areas only—use dwarf forget-me-not or dwarf nemesia Blue Gem from Sacramento south) or white violas. Clumps of white bulbous iris or daffodils complete the picture.

Accent the whiteness of birch trunks with white azaleas and yellow tulips or daffodils set in drifts of pale-blue pansies or violas.

In the Southwest, because of the mild winters, tulip bulbs should be bought now and kept in the refrigerator for 30 to 60 days before planting. Don't freeze them. The temperature should range from 36 to 40 degrees. Thorough irrigation is the first essential in the preparation of the soil for bulbs. Soak the ground well and, as soon as it is dry enough to work, dig down at least a foot and work the soil to pulverize it—add moist peat moss if soil is heavy. Work in a good commercial bulb food, too, but never use fresh manure immediately before planting. The addition of coarse sand will help assure drainage.

Depth is an important factor in the planting of bulbs. Shallow planting causes many disappointments—short stems and small blossoms.

Space spring-flowering bulbs where they are to be planted on the surface of the deeply worked and enriched soil. A labeled stake in the center of the grouping will help you keep track of the varietal name. Dig individual holes for each bulb to the depth recommended for the type being planted. Firm soil over bulbs; then water.

Perennial bargains. If you failed to start seeds of perennials in August, don't despair. Make up for lost time by buying flats of seedlings at a nursery. Depending upon the type of plant you are after, you can get them for $1.00 to $1.50 per dozen. The same plants in gallon cans next spring will cost you that much per plant.

Lasting fall color. Hydrangea flowers take on beautiful coloration as the season progresses—not the intense colors of the spring and summer blooms, but muted shades of green, bronze, red, or purple. When properly dried, they retain these soft tints for a year or more, making striking arrangements by themselves or in combination with other dried materials. These stole the show at Pomona's big flower show last fall.

Slow drying is the key to success. After the flower clusters develop fall color, cut them with stems sufficiently long for arranging. Snip off the leaves and any browned flowers in the cluster. Place them in water a cool spot out of the sun. The flowers will take up some of the water, and the rest will evaporate. Flowers need no further care except careful handling when making arrangements. Many garden clubbers find they can use them over and over.

Ideas to improve cut-flower plantings. In planning your cutting garden for 1968, look for kinds of plants with clear-colored blossoms that complement the colors of your home. Select types with different forms that contrast in arrangements. Perennials are especially useful. Plant enough of each so you can cut plenty. Unless you have the time and inclination to watch over them, avoid plants that need extra care. Roses, heliotrope, wisteria flowers, and stock are some of the flowers that provide welcome fragrance.

October is a good time to start. Here are some bouquet favorites that perform well in practically all climates. Buy such as daffodils and tulips; annuals, such as calendula, stock, Primula malacoides; perennials such as snapdragons, carnations, Shasta daisies (especially the Esther Reed variety), cornflowers, coreopsis, and polyanthus primroses.

Plant shrubs. October is an ideal time to plant shrubs. The nursery series are crowded with container-grown shrubs that will do wonderful things for your garden. The West has even a kind of climate known to many—from Sahara-Desertlike aridity to the chilly confines of the Alps. Work with your local nurseryman on the proper selections for your area.

October is also the time to plant the popular conifers, such as pines and junipers. The soil is still reasonably warm and workable, and plants have a chance to get established before winter comes.

Garden philosophy: Here's a thought for the month—it's a bit of a fall tonic and a toast to all green-thumbers.

So here's to my wonderful garden,
Here's a cure for every ill,
If you work well in your garden—
You'll never need a pill!

VERY COMPACT TOOL STORAGE

This workshop organizer does a lot with a little space. It's a wall-hugging cabinet that can accommodate most of your tools yet measures only four feet wide by 30 inches high.

Hinged, swing-out "leaves" bring tools into easy reach and triple the unit's capacity over one sheet of perforated hardboard. Here, hardboard panels are mounted on the wall and on the leaves, where they are accessible from both sides.

This all-in-one organization cuts steps and hunting time—and a fluorescent fixture on the cabinet's bottom lights your workbench. Also, with the cabinet's doors closed, tools are kept out of sight or reach of any little would-be "helpers."

Construction is simple—you build two four-sided boxes and a double-sized, three-sided box, then hang them all together with hinges.

This unit is four feet wide and 30 inches high, but you can easily adjust the size to available space—just be sure to make each swing-out leaf 1/16-inch narrower than half the width of the back, so it will open and close easily.

For the boxes, use 3/4-inch fir plywood or 1-inch lumber; make the bigger one 6 1/2 inches deep and the smaller ones 7 1/2 inches deep. Use 3/4-inch fir plywood for the doors.

You will also need screws, glue, and corner angles to make the boxes; butt hinges to connect the outside edges of the swing-out boxes to the big box; and knife hinges to hang the two doors from the sides nearest the center.

The perforated hardboard is 1/8 inch thick and reinforced with 1/2x1/2-inch wood strips every six inches. You may want to choose thicker hardboard for a larger unit. In any case, set panels into 1/4-inch dadoes cut into the sides of the three boxes.

For each leaf, nail the hardboard panels back-to-back through the wood strips placed in-between, then recess them 3 3/4 inches from the front.

For the big box, nail the hardboard through the wood strips to a 1/2-inch plywood backing. Each panel should be slipped into the dadoed sides and bottom before the top is glued and fastened into place.

In the drawing, you can see that the fluorescent tube is recessed into the bottom of the bigger box for good work-surface illumination. Attached to the back panel, the 36-inch strip fixture is enclosed on top and in front by strips of 3/4-inch fir plywood. These plywood strips are attached to the sides and back of the wall unit with glue and screws.

If you choose a spot in a basement workshop, you can mount the unit on 2x4 supports—here the 2x4s are nailed to the workbench below and the plate that's above the concrete blocks. In a garage, screw or nail the unit directly to the wall studs.

Fill the holes, sand, paint, add shelf brackets, catches, and tool hangers, and you're well on your way to an organized shop. The cabinet will keep tools off the floor and put them in a place where they're easy to find.

A SUNROOM WITH STYLE

Any long, narrow room presents special decorating problems—and this sunroom shows how to solve them. On the conversation area to minimize a "strung-out" look, use lightly scaled furniture to visually expand the width of the room. Animate abundant wall space with art and decorating emphasis to a row of windows.

Above: To create a center of interest, a blank wall is turned into an art display. Chairs alongside a game-height table set the scene for chess or a light snack. Narrow glass shelves beneath the art wall is handy to nearby chairs, and serves as a display shelf or buffet.

Below: Intimate grouping of sofa and chairs encourages conversation and disguises the skinny length of this room. At the far end, the server stands ready for instant entertaining, does not crowd the main furniture arrangement. Graceful Roman shades turn a succession of windows into a decorative plus. WALLPAPER TRICKERY

Have a decorating problem that defies solution? You'll find the answer in a wallpaper book! With today's tremendous selection of patterns and textures, you can do a lot of visual tricks with wallpaper: lower or heighten a ceiling, expand or compress space, create a view, add architectural interest. Here are four examples.

Photographs: Hedrich-Blessing. Data: Roger Bracy

If a room lacks a view, create one with a wallpaper. Here a trellised, garden-like design gives a small dining room an atmosphere of cool tranquillity. To emphasize the refreshing outdoors feeling, the green in the pattern is repeated on furniture, doors, and woodwork.

Decorator: Gertrude Cramer. Data: Jessie Walker

Don't give up on that boxlike room. Relieve its sameness with a trompe l'oeil wallpaper. Here a Greek column and balustrade design gives a sense of depth to the flat area. Coordinated border is used at ceiling and baseboard with a matching trim on the draperies.

Franklin D. Roosevelt

If I were starting life over again, I am inclined to think that I would go into the advertising business in preference to almost any other. This is because advertising has come to cover the whole range of human needs and also because it combines real imagination with a deep study of human psychology. Because it brings to the greatest number of people actual knowledge concerning useful things, it is essentially a form of education... It has risen with ever-growing rapidity to the dignity of an art. It is constantly paving new paths... The general raising of the standards of modern civilization among all groups of people during the past half century would have been impossible without the spreading of the knowledge of higher standards by means of advertising."

It is strange to find people in this country today who, in the name of everything Franklin D. Roosevelt stood for, criticize advertising and seek to restrict it? Well, among people who say that it is unfair competition for a big company to spend more on advertising than a small company. Ignoring the fact that it is advertising that helps small companies grow. . . companies like Polaroid, Xerox, Sony and dozens more who have taken on the giants in the marketplace and won their niche.

These people think we should restrict the amount of advertising a company can do—just to be fair. But, of course, big companies spend more on research and development than little companies, too. And that's even more unfair because it helps develop new products the little companies don't have. So, perhaps, we should restrict research and development.

It's too bad somebody didn't think of this 40 years ago. Then we'd all still have iceboxes. And you wouldn't have to worry about getting all that frozen food home from the supermarket before it thaws. In your 1966 Model "T."

- | | |
|---|---------------------------------------|
| 1 unbaked 9-inch pastry shell, edges crimped high | 1½ cups shredded natural Swiss cheese |
| 1 envelope dry cream of leek soup mix | 1 teaspoon dry mustard |
| 1½ cups milk | Dash pepper |
| ½ cup light cream | 2 4½-ounce cans deviled ham |
| 3 slightly beaten eggs | 2 tablespoons fine dry bread crumbs |

Bake pastry shell in very hot oven (450°) 7 minutes. In medium saucepan, combine soup mix and milk. Cook, stirring constantly, till mixture boils. Cool slightly; stir in cream. Combine eggs, cheese, mustard, and pepper. Slowly stir in soup mixture. Mix together deviled ham and crumbs. Spread ham mixture over bottom and sides of pie shell. Pour soup mixture over deviled ham. Bake in moderate oven (375°) 45 to 50 minutes, or till knife inserted in center of pie comes out clean. (If crust browns too rapidly, cover edges with foil.) Remove from oven; let stand about 10 minutes before cutting. Makes 6 servings.

To complete the menu: Serve guests Cranberry Consommé (a can of beef broth or consommé and a pint of cranberry juice) over ice in living room while brunch cooks. Bake Brioche along with pie. Add Tarragon Tomatoes for last ten or fifteen minutes. (Cut a slice off top of each tomato; dot with butter and sprinkle with tarragon.)

CHILDREN'S FURNITURE THAT'S HERE TO STAY

Photographs: Alderman Studios, Inc.

Above: "Bunk House" is furnished to bear the brunt of the lively ones. And it's planned to see boys through all growing stages. This is what we mean by switchability—when boys are older you can use bunk beds as single ones, back-to-back desks as end tables. Just like that—a whole new look!

All the furniture in the room is solid oak and oak veneers—the kind of wood kids can kick, puppies can chew, and parties can't punish. The wood has actually been distressed to handle most any onslaught short of an Indian raid.

Left: Even a confirmed tomboy will learn to enjoy being a girl in a room like this. It looks as sophisticated as a teen-ager likes to think she is.

The French Provincial furniture is feminine, functional and flexible enough to carry a young miss from dancing school to college prom.

Lift the mirror and the handsome table is perfect for make-up sessions. Lower it, and it's fine for study or correspondence. The tall chest holds lingerie, sweaters.

Chances are, the daughter of the house will elect to take this elegant furniture along with her when she moves out. But if not, it will fit in beautifully in a guest room.

Have you noticed the difference in children's furniture have! A lot of that contrived whimsy is gone. Today's furniture is still youthful in spirit—but it's also substantial, and stylish.

Best of all, this is furniture with a future. Emphasis on flexibility and switchability—so the furniture can grow along with the child, adapting to his changing needs. Not kid stuff, but its usefulness extends far beyond childhood.

Notice the handsome designs and honest good workmanship of these groups. No make-do, hand-me-down attitude.

Buying Guide

Top: Here's something new for the teen-ager—a bed with all the sophistication of a small sitting room. The daughter of the house will find it perfect for entertaining friends in closed-door privacy. And should she have an overnight guest, the pull-out provides a bed. The framed up bed can double as an armed studio couch; pull-out can be on its own base for auxiliary seating. When daughter moves on to set up housekeeping in a honeymoon apartment or bachelor girl's efficiency, this adaptable trundle bed will well be the first piece of furniture.

Below: A setup like this will serve the young student handsomely—right through college. The flexible furniture does things that standard furniture won't do—turns corners, runs under windows. Without the black metal ferrules, beds become good looking twins. Splendid idea—the beds caddy that hooks over rail, providing a suspended night table for the long-neglected upper deck. Hanging shelves, inverted make a storage headboard. Decks and bookshelves have special bases so they can also serve other needs in other places. Wall-hugging furniture like this leaves plenty of space for an active boy to move around freely—or spread eagle on the floor whenever he feels like it.

ADD PRIVACY AND BACKGROUND TO THE PATIO

Evergreens are a natural for your patio. Year round, they put their well-filled branches between you and the neighbor or an unsightly view. In summer flowers sparkle in the more when silhouetted against the background of green foliage. The ground-cover just makes a neat, maintenance-free border along the curved edge of the patio—especially important during winter months when the flower bed behind is devoid of blossoms.

Choose hardy pines for decorative pots shown on the wide redwood step. Or you can substitute junipers trained into ming trees.

The vertical, individual set redwood 2x4s that compose the curved screen provide privacy without cutting off circulation of air, and plants on both sides get better light than they would if the screen had been solid construction.

The pyracantha border at the back of the house has white blossoms in spring and bright red berries in fall. See Plant List A on page 14 for recommended varieties.

BRING UNIQUE EVERGREENS INTO THE GARDEN

Feature an evergreen in a pot along the border of the garden or in the foundation plantings. You can buy pines and junipers trained and shaped by professional plantmen, but they are a little costly by most standards. You can get a contorted pine or a Japanese black pine and train it yourself: wire the branches to pegs driven in the ground, and then trim to open the structure of the plant.

An interesting boulder or rock is a must for the best display of specimens of this type. A variety of ground covers gives the final touch to the scene.

The trimmed hemlock hedge is an excellent privacy screen and background; it gains special interest here with the bamboo pole fence. See Plant List B on page 140.

ACHES AND PAINS

proved effective in halting both the backaches and the spinal change.

How you can ease the pains of arthritis, rheumatism, and bursitis.

More than fifty different diseases fall within this group, ranging all the way from housemaid's knee and tennis elbow to crippling deformations of the joints and bones. Many of them are as painful as they are common. Some measure of relief can usually be gained from the safest and most accessible of all the drugs: aspirin. Not only does aspirin ease the pain, it also contributes to healing.

The massive doses of aspirin required in severe cases are by no means harmless; however, the dosage should be supervised by a doctor. One sign that the aspirin level in the body has reached a critical point is ringing in the ears. In addition, aspirin, heat application and many doctors recommend a hot tub bath twice a day.

When your feet are sore.

Flat feet, politely known as "fallen arches," are the most common cause of pain, and sometimes the pain stretches all the way up through the legs to the lower back. For prompt relief, take aspirin and soak your feet alternately in hot and cold water. For the long-range treatment, improve your walking habits: keep your feet padded rather than toed-out when you walk. Certain types of fallen arches can be helped by strengthening the muscles of the feet, for example, picking up marbles with your toes. Sponge-rubber supports in shoes may help. Severe cases may require real or plastic arch supports.

Ill-fitting shoes may distort the arch. More often, the pressure and abrasion of ill-fitting shoes cause painful calluses or corns, which may become infected. A doctor can take care of the simple surgical means. To prevent their recurrence as well as more serious foot problems, be sure you're wearing comfortable, well-fitted shoes.

The dangers and benefits of pain-killer drugs.

Relief from pain is one of the greatest achievements of modern medicine. Pain-killing drugs range from general anesthetics that render the patient unconscious to local anesthetics that temporarily deaden sensitivity at the painful site.

By far the safest pain-killer is aspirin. Nobody knows exactly how it works, but it is extremely effective in reducing pain sensitivity and has virtually no side effects for most people in normal dosage.

Any pain-killer more powerful than aspirin is likely to be dangerous. The most powerful is morphine, which blots out awareness of even the most severe pain. But because of the high risk of addiction, doctors hesitate to use it except in the most desperate situations. Some synthetic drugs, such as meperidine and methadone, resemble morphine in pain-killing efficiency but also in addictiveness.

A family of drugs known as barbiturates is often used for pain relief though its primary function is sedation. Unlike morphine and its related drugs, barbiturates do not specifically block pain perception but dull the pain by their general sedative action. Unfortunately, if they too may be addictive if used regularly for several weeks. Emotionally unstable people, in particular, may become dependent on such drugs.

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS, OCTOBER

A COMPLETE PLANNING GUIDE TO HAWAII

Drawings: Hugh Stirts

Southwest of San Francisco about 2,400 miles is the nearest thing to a tropical paradise—with modern conveniences—that can be found anywhere in the world. This is Hawaii.

The islands that make up our 50th state offer something to every traveler who nurses a secret longing for a true island idyll. The Hawaiian group was formed by some two dozen volcanoes rising from the deep floor of the Pacific. Of today's 24 islands, eight are major or High Islands; the others, the Leeward Islands, are uninhabited. And of the High Islands, only six are of immediate interest to tourists.

These are Oahu, Hawaii, Maui, Kauai, Molokai, and Lanai. The other two are Kahoolawe, once used by Hawaiian monarchs as a penal colony and now a target for U.S. warships and planes; and privately owned Niihau, where a group of pure-blooded Hawaiians live in the "old" Hawaiian way (visits are by invitation only).

● What to see and do. With Hawaii's year-around spring (the average temperature is 75 degrees), the nature-lover and the lazy sunbather are blessed. Hunters and fishermen will find their sports available in every season. The physically active traveler can keep up his game—be it hiking, beachcombing, golfing, or skin diving—and also try out some sports of strictly Island origin: surfing, ti-sliding (sledding down wet or muddy slopes on the big ti plant leaves), and outrigger canoe paddling.

The cosmopolite will delight in the international atmosphere of the metropolitan Honolulu area, where East and West meet and mingle happily, and where there is exquisite Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Hawaiian, Filipino, and American cuisine to be savored.

Serious shoppers can find beautiful handcrafted Hawaiian and Samoan items never seen in Mainland import shops, as well as casually chic Hawaii-designed clothes and a splendid array of gifts imported from the Far East.

The scenery of Hawaii is unsurpassed. There are mountains covered with lush tropic growth; volcanoes, some active and surrounded by barren moonscapes; desert-like terrain; sylvan parklands; towering cliffs that fall into the sea; deep, hidden valleys; so many spectacular waterfalls that most are not even named; native-style dwellings where Hawaiians live much as their ancestors did; fantastic beaches; and all around you the blue, tropical sea and friendly sun.

If you have some leeway in setting your vacation time, you may be able to arrange your visit to the Islands during at least one festival. And most Hawaiian celebrations are worth the extra trouble. Check with the Hawaii Visitors Bureau, Honolulu, for a schedule of festivals and other events.

● How to get there. Hawaii's accessibility is another bonus. There are no special documents required, no health precautions to take, no difficulty with foreign currency, no worry about coping with strange languages or customs. In short, Hawaii has all the advantages of exotic atmosphere, and none of the inconveniences.

You can fly there or go by ship. Direct five-hour service to Honolulu is available on regularly scheduled jet flights from Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle. Air fares from these West Coast terminals range from $200 round trip per person in the economy class (from California only); $220 for coach (the extra charge represents one meal each way and different seating arrangements than the economy class); and $285 for first-class fare. Tax depends on your embarkation point, but it is very small.

No family plan is presently available on these Honolulu runs, so one-way fares are just half, except in first-class accommodations where you save $15 by getting a round-trip ticket. (It's $150 one way.)

If you decide to go by ship, you can leave the West Coast (San Francisco or Los Angeles) approximately every 10 days on a voyage of about 4½ days. Although the ship is one class, with everyone using the same dining and recreational facilities, cabins vary widely in price—from $230 to $785 per person, one way. The minimum fares don't include private baths, however.

No matter which way you go, you must make connections in Honolulu to reach any of the Neighbor Islands. (This term is applied to all the Islands except Oahu, where Honolulu is located.) On a flight between the Mainland and a Neighbor Island, the total air fare is now the same as it is for the Mainland to Honolulu trip.

When not part of your West Coast to Hawaii flight, round-trip fares from Honolulu are as follows: Island of Hawaii, Hilo $38.28, Kona or Kamuela $33.90; Island of Maui, Kahului $25.14, Hana $30.10; Island of Kauai $25.14; Island of Lanai $21.52; Island of Molokai $18.10. Children 2 to 12, half fare; under 2 years, free, if held by an adult.

● Where to stay. Accommodations in Hawaii range from expensive and luxurious beach resort hotels to inexpensive but comfortable hotels that feature lower prices in lieu of a position on the beach. To help you pick a hotel that fits your needs, we've selected several in the low, medium, and high price ranges. You'll find them in following sections about the individual Hawaiian Islands.

● Some helpful hints. Although everyone speaks English, there is a liberal sprinkling of Hawaiian words in all the conversation, and it's helpful to know a few of the common terms. For instance, because the Islands sit at an angle on the map, few directions are given as north, south, east, or west. One direction is makai (mah-KAI), or toward the ocean. The opposite direction is mauka (MAU-kah), or toward the mountains which are always in the center of each island. This is a surprisingly easy way to orient yourself.

Other directions are given in relation to any handy landmark. You might be directed to "go Diamond Head," or toward that easily-recognized landmark.

A few other constantly used Hawaiian words include malihini . . . newcomer; kamaaina . . . old-timer; luau . . . feast; lua . . . bathroom (don't confuse these last two); mahalo . . . thank you; and, naturally, aloha . . . greetings, love, welcome, farewell, please.

● Tips for campers. Campers can pick sites at deserted beaches; seldom-explored forests and glades; or a quiet cottage in some relatively civilized but unspoiled spot.

If you want to avoid the beaten track, you'll find your best bets are on the Neighbor Islands. Write the National Park Service and Hawaii's State Parks Commission for details on campsites, fees, and facilities.

One of the nicest things for hikers and campers is that the Islands are snake and poison ivy free. (There are those ubiquitous mosquitoes, but who can expect everything?)

● What to wear. Planning your wardrobe is a simple task. Informality is the rule, although you will probably want to wear a dark suit or dressy cocktail dress at a few of the better restaurants and nightclubs.

Because weather is always springlike in Hawaii, a light wrap will be enough for all occasions except trips up into the mountains. But don't forget your comfortable walking shoes. It's also a good idea to save some of your clothing allowance to spend here, for there are original Hawaii fashions in irresistible variety.

Here, island by island, are some of the best points of each to help you map your trip:

OAHU (oh-AH-hoo)

While not the biggest island, Oahu is the most populous and the center of activity in Hawaii. On Oahu are metropolitan Honolulu, Waikiki Beach, and the historic U.S. Naval Base at Pearl Harbor. You can even plan your whole Hawaiian trip around Oahu and still come away with a good sampling of what the Islands have to offer.

The visitor who misses seeing Waikiki Beach is a rare bird indeed, in spite of charges that it has become commercial and overcrowded. Waikiki should be experienced. The beach is lovely, with good swimming and beautiful scenery, surfers, catamarans, outrigger canoes, bikini girls, and beachboys. The Waikiki area also has excellent shops dealing almost exclusively with top-quality goods (and that generally means paying more).

Hotels in the area are often luxurious, such as the Royal Hawaiian, the Halekulani, and the Foster Tower (an apartment hotel), with prices from $19 to $35 per day for two. Within a few blocks of the beach proper, there are many excellent medium-priced accommodations (from $15 to $25 for a double) including the Aina Luana apartment hotel (four blocks from the beach); Hawaiiana Hotel (one block); and the Privateer Hotel (two blocks).

Still more economical facilities (about $12 a night) in the Waikiki area include the Royal Grove Hotel Apartments (two blocks from the beach); the Guest House Hotel, a pleasant and rambling old house; and the Islander Hotel and Apartments.

In the Honolulu area you will discover superb cuisine at some internationally-known restaurants. Some are expensive, but such outings can be judiciously sandwiched between adventures in less famous top-quality places. One reminder: it's usually best to make reservations.

In the expensive dinner category ($6 per person and up) are John Henry's; Michel's, at the Colony Surf, a French eating place specializing in such things as pheasant under glass and mangoes champagne; Royal Hawaiian Hotel, with a Roman banquet luncheon buffet (over 100 dishes) and all sorts of delicacies in food and wine on the dinner menu.

In the medium to expensive category ($3 to $6) are a large number of top-notch eating places. Traditional Hawaiian food is served at the Hilton Hawaiian Village Makahiki Room. The Ishii Garden is a popular teahouse where you don kimonos for Japanese food, and the Kanraku Tea House has an excellent Japanese chef. For a little bit of everything, there's the Merry Monarch, which probably has the broadest menu in town. Here you can get everything from gefilte fish and mutton chops to Cornish game hen stuffed with pineapple.

Inexpensive eating places (under $3) include Arirang, a good spot to have your first taste of spicy Korean dishes, and the Hofbrau, which dispenses German beer along with Teutonic food. There's also Sekiya's, a workingman's Japanese restaurant, and the Swiss Chalet, where the specialty is fondue bourguignon.

Be sure to attend at least one authentic luau. Several of the hotels offer a luau at least once a week; for $9 to $10 you get native Hawaiian food plus drinks and entertainment—including hula dancing, of course.

You shouldn't overlook the church luaus, either. In Hawaii, luaus take the place of Mainland rummage sales or ice cream socials as fund-raising events. Check the Waikiki Beach Press or inquire at the Hawaii Visitors Bureau information desk for times and places. The church luaus provide food just as good and usually more authentic than the commercial types, and the entertainment is quite good. Also, the prices are somewhat lower ($5 to $6).

You will probably find, as most tourists do, that it is handy to headquarter at Waikiki or in downtown Honolulu, and plan your side trips from those central locations.

If this is your first trip to the Islands, you should see Pearl Harbor. This is usually easiest to arrange through your hotel for some morning or afternoon. The tour ($7.50 adult, $3.50 children) consists of a cruise through the channels of the great military base past the U.S.S. Arizona National Memorial. Today this white concrete-and-steel structure spans the 186-foot hull of the battleship Arizona, watery grave of 1,102 men who died December 7, 1941. Free public tours of the memorial are provided by the U.S. Navy (there is often a long waiting list on these).

Honolulu's Bishop Museum has the world's most complete collection of facts and artifacts from Polynesia. Here, in brief, you'll find the history of the Hawaiian people, with grimacing idols, shark-tooth knives, fishhooks made of human bone, and fascinating Hawaiian feather art. Admission to the museum costs $1.50 for adults, children half price.

Also of interest is the Queen Emma Museum, former home of a Hawaiian queen. The well-preserved, fully furnished house features a fascinating mixture of the savage and the sophisticated.

The dynamic University of Hawaii is well worth your visit.

Within its prestigious East-West Center, the Kennedy Theater stages everything from Kabuki and No (drama) to student productions and musical comedy.

In downtown Honolulu is Iolani Palace, former home of native royalty, now the capitol building of the state. The throne room remains just as it was during the monarchy; you can see it (free) Monday through Friday, except when the legislature is in session. Then the House of Representatives takes it over.

You will enjoy the Foster Botanical Gardens' displays of tropical trees and plants, and the colorful collection of orchids (free). The park was once part of the lands of Queen Kalama, wife of Kamehameha III.

Art lovers will find a number of galleries in the city. The Honolulu Academy of Arts is a cultural center of Hawaii. The gallery houses an excellent permanent collection of Oriental and Western art, and sponsors a flourishing art school—along with concerts, plays, lectures, craft demonstrations, and showings of the works of the Hawaii art colony.

During the winter, the Honolulu Symphony provides an unusually varied musical fare. Programs and guest artists come from both Asia and Europe. In the summer, the "Starlight Concert" orchestra performs at the Waikiki Shell.

Some tours from Honolulu are best made by car (special car rental packages can be arranged when you make your plane reservations). One is a seven-mile trip to Nuuanu Pali lookout, atop a mist-shrouded 1,200-foot cliff. The drive to the lookout can also include a stop at Upside Down Falls where strong updrafts blow a couple of waterfalls the wrong way.

Beyond Waikiki and Makapuu Point, at Waimanalo, is Sea Life Park—a spectacular marine exhibit by the ocean ($2.30 adults, $1.15 children). Trained porpoises perform every 45 minutes, and you can see a rare collection of whales and other Pacific marine life from below decks aboard a replica of a square-rigged whaling ship.

Only five minutes from Wai-kiki, undiluted by hurry, worry or progress, is Ulu Mau Village. In its grass-thatched houses, crews of native craftsmen work as their ancestors did, creating the handmade artifacts of a nearly forgotten way of life. Here even the leis are made the old-fashioned way, with ferns, vines, flowers, and smiles. To reach the Village, take a cab (standard tour buses don't stop here).

Across the island from Honolulu, at Laie, is the Polynesian Cultural Center, a cluster of six South Sea island villages. These represent the cultures of the Maoris, Samoans, Tongans, Fijians, Tahitians, and Hawaiians. Natives of these various cultures provide authentic entertainment each Friday and Saturday evening (more often in the summer). In this living museum, you can observe customs, arts, crafts, and sports. Admission is $2.10 for adults, $1.05 for children.

No one should leave the Islands without getting out on the sea at least once, and the Honolulu area probably provides the greatest variety of choices. There are outrigger canoe rides—safe and exciting for the whole family—and the usual catamaran and motorboat cruises. Sailboats are also available, and deep-sea fishing charters can be arranged at Fisherman's Wharf, home of Oahu's sportsfishers.

Oahu is the most convenient tour island, but the Neighbor Islands have every bit as much to offer. If you're already based in Oahu, remember that a trip to a Neighbor Island means extra plane fare, but it's easily worth it.

KAUAI (KOW-a-ee)

Only 35 minutes from Oahu by air, Kauai is the oldest, wettest, and greenest of all the Islands. Here the legendary Menehunes (or at least a race of small men) lived and left their skillful stonework.

Kauai has a couple of good shelling beaches, great skin diving, excellent fishing from the shore, trout fishing in mountain streams, and some parks for camping.

One of the shelling and beachcombing beaches is near the town of Koloa; another, Lumahai, is across the island of Wainiha. You can lose yourself awhile in the mountain vastness of Kauai and discover the beautiful, uninhabited Kalalau Valley. Until about 1920, natives still lived there in grass houses, following their traditional ways and sharing the products of their labor equally with all inhabitants.

Not far from this spot are Waimea Canyon at Kekaha, a Grand Canyon in miniature, and primitive Kokee State Park. On the north coast area you can see the magnificent towering cliffs of Na Pali, accessible only by helicopter, boat (during summer months only), or a very experienced hiker.

Freshwater fishermen (license, $2.50 for tourists, good for 30 days) can fish in public fishing areas, including Waimea Canyon, Kokee Park (cabins at $4 per person per day can be rented here), and the back country near the town of Wailua.

You can hunt (license for nonresident, $15) on Kauai for Hawaiian wild pig, wild goat, ring-necked pheasant, and lace-necked dove. Write the State Division of Fish and Game, 400 S. Beretania St., Honolulu, for detailed hunting and fishing regulations.

There is no public transportation system on Kauai, so the best way to get around is by rented car or jeep. Hotel accommodations and cottages range from quite modest to luxurious (up to $40 per day). The Kauai Surf Hotel and The Coco Palms offer particularly good values.

HAWAII (huh-WY-ee)

This is the largest island, home of recently active volcanoes and wildly contrasting scenery—from lush tropical jungle to barren lava desert. Here too are the great cattle ranches (and the best places to find good horseback riding), sugar cane plantations, truck farms, coffee plantations, and orchid fields.

Make it a point to try the beach at Hapuna—little known, but rated by experts (along with Kaanapali on the Island of Maui) as one of the five great classic beaches of the world. The water is clearer than champagne, with no coral or rock formations. The skin diving is spectacular, and swimming is usually quite safe (but inquire about undertow conditions daily). Rock headlands protect the beach from the full ocean violence.

One sight that shouldn't be missed is Volcanoes National Park. This is one of the world's most studied volcanic areas; the park includes Kilauea and Mauna Loa Volcanoes, groves of giant red ferns, hardwood rain forests, and rare plant and bird life.

FAMILY TRAVEL

The vast crater of Kilauea is the legendary home of Pele, Hawaii's goddess of fire. The crater is two and a half miles wide, with plumes of steam rising from the bleak lava surface. In the bottom of the crater is a gigantic hole, the Halemaumau Firepit, a sight straight from Dante's Inferno. A hotel and popular lunch stop, Volcano House, sits on the crater's edge.

Sixteen miles north of the town of Hilo is Akaka Falls, which drop 420 feet into Keokole Stream. Here the dense overgrowth gives the light a strange, muted quality.

Hunting on Hawaii is better than on any other Island. You can freshwater fish in the Kohala Public Fishing area near the town of Hilo and in the Waiakea Public Fishing area near Hilo. There is a sports fishing center at Kailua where you can charter boats.

In the Kilauea and Kamoamoa sectors of Volcanoes National Park you'll find campgrounds, along with fully-equipped cabins in the Mauna Loa sector. There are also campsites at Manuka State Park in the Kau Desert on the leeward slope of Kilauea Volcano. Nearby is Black Sand Beach at Punaluu. This startling area was formed when boiling lava exploded into tiny particles as it hit the water.

One of the famous resort cities on Hawaii that has managed to retain the quiet tempo of former days is Kona, where rates at the better-known hotels such as the Kona Inn and King Kamehameha range from $14 to $33 per couple. Much less expensive accommodations (from $8 to $10 double) can be found around the towns of Hilo, Kailua, and Hawi. A couple of these are the Hotel Honokaa Club, Honokaa Village, and the Luke's Hotel at Hawi, which is far off the beaten path. Car and jeep rentals are easily obtained at major hotels or airports.

MAUI (MAW-ee)

Maui is really two islands, formed by two large volcanoes and joined by an isthmus. It has two faces: on the leeward side are more sunny, uncrowded beaches than anywhere else in Hawaii; and across the island, where the rain falls almost daily, are jungles and a black lava coastline of cliffs and waterfalls.

Haleakala National Park is the site of an enormous dormant volcano 33 miles long and rising 10,023 feet above sea level. Its crater, one of the largest on earth, is seven miles long and two and a half miles wide—a weird place of eroded valleys sliced into the volcano sides, mists, clouds, and strange animal and plant life. In the park are the rare nene (Hawaiian goose) and the silversword plant, which grows only in this area.

If you are feeling really brave, a supreme thrill is a horseback ride down the side of Haleakala into the crater. There are camping and picnic facilities in the park, and three cabins on the crater floor, maintained by the National Park Service. From January to March, snow (yes, snow) may make the road up to the crater slippery, and at any time of year the temperature at the crater rim is about 30 degrees below that at sea level. Camping and hiking permits must be obtained at park headquarters so the rangers will know where to look if you get lost.

On Maui, you should browse along the Wailea coast where stately woods fringe a series of lovely beaches, including Flemings and Napili. Here, too, is Kaanapali Beach, that sister classic to Hapuna on Hawaii. At Kaanapali there is the same champagne-clear water (you can see 100 feet underwater), plus twice as much beach and several luxury hotels with rates beginning at about $18 double. At Lahaina, once the whaling center of the Pacific, King Kamehameha III established his capital because of the beauty of the countryside.

Maui has a good range of hotels, from the luxurious Hotel Hana-Maui (from $55 AP per day per couple), to the quaint and very reasonable Pioneer Inn at Lahaina (about $10 EP).

MOLOKAI (moll-o-KEE) AND LANAI (lan-EE)

These two islands attract few visitors. Molokai, though fertile, lacks drinking water, and Lanai is almost entirely owned by the Hawaiian Pineapple Company. Cars can be rented on both islands, and there are a few places to camp.

On Molokai, the scenic Hala-wa Valley contains two waterfalls and the remains of an ancient village which has yielded many artifacts to archaeological groups. Lanai City on the "pineapple island" is a picturesque company town.

This is the part of carpeting you see only once in a lifetime.

This is B.F. Goodrich carpet cushion. Once it's installed under a carpet, it's there to stay.

It needn't be replaced.

It never stops making the carpet feel deep, soft and bouncy.

It never stops protecting the carpet from wear, from getting bald spots.

We make this cushion out of natural rubber.

That's why it's soft, but not mushy. That's why it never flattens out, or loses its bounce.

That's why it never mildews or rots once it's under the carpet, never gets fleas from the family dog or cat, never makes you sneeze if you're allergic.

B.F. Goodrich guarantees your carpet cushion against defects in workmanship and material or we will replace without charge. Not just for the life of the carpet, but without time limit.

So, when you buy a carpet, be sure to ask for BFG carpet cushion. And, when installation day comes, take one good, last look at the cushion.

PLASTIC LAMINATE

might want to pry off the old backsplash before beginning work. If the backsplash is cut out to fit around windows, you can use the old pieces for patterns for the new. Build the new counter to span the counter top space with just enough clearance to slide it in easily. Now (preferably on Saturday morning) take out your old sink or have it removed by a plumber. Take off the old counter and fasten on the new one with screws from below. Fasten the backsplash pieces on the wall with nails into the studs. Now apply the laminate to the backsplash pieces as shown in the drawing. Notice that this is one instance where you apply the edging (top) last. You can also get a metal edging that snaps on and makes trimming unnecessary. As an alternative method, you can apply the laminate directly to the wall with no plywood backing at all, using a metal top edging as shown. At backsplash corner joints, the easiest thing to do is to simply butt the joints together with a bead of silicone rubber tub caulk between, wiping off the caulk that oozes out to make a small fillet. In fact, a small bead of silicone rubber put inside each molding before the laminate is inserted the counter top cove. Now, n on the counter top cove shown in the drawing, again with some silicone rubber seal it against the backsplash laminate. Cut the counter top laminate, and, if you're using laminate on the front edge of the counter top, cut, apply a trim it. You apply the counter top laminate in the usual way except that you must bow slightly in the middle to feed into the cove moldings at the ends and then flatten it to slide it into the molding along the back. A dress rehearsal before applying the cement is a good idea. It's also especially important to make sure the cement dry enough so it won't stick the brown wrapping paper sheet. The slipsheet will have to cover the top all the way the back molding and will be hard to pull out if the cement is at all sticky. For even better control than a slipsheet gives you, substitute 1/4-inch dowels laid across the counter about 4-inch intervals. Pull the dowels out one at a time as you smooth down the laminate.

After trimming the front counter edge, you're ready to make the sink cutout. Use a metal cutting blade in your saber saw for this operation and go slow so as not to chip the laminate excessively. Be sure to allow the proper clearance around the new sink rim as specified by the instructions you get with it. This is usually about 1/2-inch. This way there's plenty of room for the hold downs (see drawing), plus a little "play" for moving the sink around to reconnect it. If you have trouble getting clearance at the back of the sink for your saber saw, you can unfasten the top from the cabinet and slide it forward, away from the backsplash. Anticipate the problem is a good ounce of prevention against future water problems. You can also put a piece of metal cove in the corner joint with the bottom edge filed to make a three way miter with and don't put the rubber caulk on the cove molding until after the sink cutout is made. Hang the sink from the sink rim and reconnect the plumbing. See why we said to wait for a weekend to start this job?

THE WALL-TO-WALL "THROW" RUG

LOOMWEVE'S "CANDIDO" CARPET MADE WITH VECTRA FIBER

Throw a party on it. Or an hors d'oeuvre. Or even a cocktail.
Most every stain wipes clean with soap and water.

Meet the "people-proof" carpet. □ New Loomweve Candido made with Vectra® fiber gives you everything a carpet should . . . plus a good bit more. Sheer luxury and the amazing ability to laugh off just about every spot and spill in the book. □ Vectra fiber is stubbornly stain-resistant. So spilled drinks, sticky food stains, even household chemicals won't penetrate. Wipe 'em clean with detergent and water. Vectra fiber also makes Candido uncommonly rugged, fade-resistant, mothproof and virtually static-free. □ The luxury you'll just have to see. Candido's lavish, random-sheared, 2-level scroll design gives it a deeply-etched cobblestone effect. In Tropic Green. Palm Green. Shadow Green. Sunglow. Inca Gold. Spun Gold. Gulf Blue. Butternut. Regal Red. Take your choice of 12 and 15 foot widths. □ So check your nearest Loomweve dealer and let him introduce you to Candido made with Vectra fiber. He'll have one final surprise for you. Candido's surprisingly modest cost. And once it's yours . . . feel free to celebrate. Throw a party on it.

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS, OCTOBER, 1966

Here I am at 208 pounds. As you can see, I was too big to hide behind my daughter, Jill—but that didn't stop me from trying.

Now, at 120 pounds, I'm proud to stand alone. In fact, nobody has to coax me these days to have my picture taken.

My own father didn't know me after I lost 88 pounds.

By June Anglin Chamberlain—as told to Ruth L. McCarthy

AT the age of thirty-one, I was literally a human garbage pail. I weighed 208 pounds, though I was only a fraction over five feet three. And because of my insatiable appetite, I lost my looks. I lost my personality. I even lost my liking for people.

I wasn't always like that. In 1957, I was a receptionist-secretary for a very large firm in Orlando, Florida. And pretty popular with the men. In fact, I married one of the salesmen. And though I wasn't what you'd call really thin, I was trim. About 135 pounds at the time of my wedding.

It was only after I had lost one child at birth and miscarried another that I began to pile on the pounds. Between tears, I consoled myself with food. Pies, pretzels and sweets. Why, it was nothing for me to sit before the television set and eat a pound of malt balls or a whole box of peanut brittle.

When I finally completed a pregnancy and gave birth to a beautiful little girl, I was way, way overweight. And my appetite was completely out of control.

My dress size was up to 20½. And my blouses were all overblouses. I don't know who I thought I was kidding by letting them hang out, but they were more comfortable that way than tucked in. By the time we had moved to Port Washington, N. Y., I could hardly pick up my daughter. The fat just got in the way.

I had reached the point where I didn't want to go anywhere or do anything. Whenever I was with people, and somebody laughed, I froze. I was always sure they were laughing at me. Nothing was funny anymore. I even turned off my friends. As you can see, my weight problem was turning me into an introvert.

In desperation, I asked my doctor about a certain reducing drug. And he said I could take it. But that didn't help my terrible craving for candy. It was almost like the craving of an alcoholic.

I knew that without candy, I wouldn't stick to the reducing drug long enough for it to do me any good. Then I remembered reading about a vitamin and mineral reducing-plan candy, called Ayds, that had helped a lot of people. Since it contained no harmful drugs, I picked up a box at the drugstore. And what did I do? I took the reducing pill, but at the same time used Ayds. And I lost 40 pounds!

The drug, however, began to get on my nerves, and I finally decided to give it up. It was making me too jittery. Besides, I was afraid I might become addicted to it. So I made up my mind to give the Ayds Plan a chance to work by itself. And you know what? It did! I pasted a picture of my fat self on the refrigerator door. And believe me, that little candy helped me close that door more often than I can tell. Ayds actually helped me have more will power than I ever thought possible. In fact, it helped me lose 48 more pounds! As my waistline shrank, so did my appetite. On the Ayds Plan, I found that I ate less, because I really wanted less. I was constantly having my clothes taken in. When the seams overlapped, I knew it was time for a new wardrobe. For the new me. Just 120 pounds of me!

What's it like living in a thin world? Heavenly! Just heavenly! I even feel like I'm a star. Interested in the theater all my life, I decided to give it a whiz. I joined the Port Washington Play Troupe and now, as an assistant director, I'm getting applause from both friends and strangers.

I no longer wear dark colors. I can even get into size 8 dresses without any problems. And stretch pants, no matter how bright the color, look great on me. What's more, I've taken up ice-skating and skiing, and I'm able to do things with my daughter that previously were physically impossible. Though only six years old, she said to me the other day: "Mommy, you're as little as I am." That's how my child sees me.

As a matter of fact, my father sees me in almost the same light. When he and my mother came north to visit me, I arranged to meet them at Penn Station. But I sent no photos on ahead. I really wanted to surprise them. As I came up to my dad, I said: "Sir, can you tell me where the information booth is?" He turned to point the way. And it was not until I giggled that he recognized his own daughter—88 pounds slimmer!

All I can say to other women is: "Take a good look at yourself, girls!" I do, every day now, through a new pair of eyeglasses! A smaller pair, because even my face is slimmer—thanks to the help of a little candy, called Ayds.

AMBROSIA

Just picture these irresistible kittens in your own home. Everyone who sees these appealing waifs falls in love with their adorable warmth and touching wide eyes. You simply want to take them into your home and into your heart. That's because the artist, Gig, one of America's most perceptive painters of animals, has captured the universal appeal and charm of these intriguing felines. Under his sensitive brush, the wistful quality of kittens and the realistic backgrounds combine to give a compassionate glimpse of life. Unfortunately the black and white illustrations here cannot possibly convey all the artist's magical colors and exquisite details. Only when you see them in your home can you fully appreciate their magnificent artistry and exquisite beauty.

OFFER WILL NOT BE REPEATED THIS SEASON

We urge you to order your full color prints now while the supply lasts. The dramatic portraiture of animals is the latest decorator rage, and these are certain to go quickly. In order to show some of the craftsmanship and intricate detail in all the pictures, we have shown one picture larger than the rest. Actually all four fine art prints are the same size, a full 10" x 14" decorator size. So hurry, order now, offer will not be repeated this season in this magazine.

No urging needed from parents. Children love these records. Each table has its own

"I undercooked it so it won't be overcooked when I warm it over tomorrow."

Representative Nick Hanfli isn't going to Vietnam. He says he gets the impression that one more Congressman is pretty low on the list of what the troops want over there.

Christine strongly favors government protection of the consumer, but she hopes it won't interfere with her freedom to buy something extravagantly foolish when she feels like it.

Laura Jean Johnson has been catering parties in our town for 30 years. When people who have moved away come back on a visit, they say the buildings and streets have changed, and all they recognize are Laura Jean's hors d'oeuvres.

His mother thinks Bud works too hard running on and off the field in his job as waterboy for the high school varsity. However, I remember when I was his waterboy, fetching him "just one more drink" at 3 a.m.

In looking over some old family portraits and photographs, I note that although the Hillis' fortunes have changed from generation to generation, the Hillis' nose has been handed down virtually unchanged.

Uncle Dodd Buckner agrees with the prediction that medical science will someday be able to replace worn-out organs of the body. However, he figures he is already an obsolete model for which doctors won't carry any spare parts.

By this time, school is far enough along so our children can tell how many of their lifelong friendships survived the summer separation.

"We are going upstairs to wash our hair," announces Rosemary, who heads the school paper this semester and is enamored of the editorial plural.

Weary from raking, Bill Norman says it takes an awfully big pile of leaves to accommodate three small children and two dogs.

The Rev. George Hall declines to be specific about what Heaven is like. I tell him I like to think of it as an eternity of early Octobers.

The smoke from burning leaves pollutes the air the way sewage pollutes the river, so why do poets write odes to the former and ignore the latter?

I always set a good example in sportsmanship for the neighborhood kids. For example, I pretend my feelings aren't hurt when, in choosing up sides for touch football, they pick my wife before they do me.

I realized I was losing contact with the neighborhood last Halloween when I failed to recognize two of the youngest goblins, a pirate and a witch. This fall in anticipation, I've been studying the shapes and sizes of the tots for three blocks in all directions.

Martin Daly, who is tremendously fond of his daughter-in-law, says he can understand how the same girl could provide him with such wonderful grandchildren and such terrible coffee.

Last week along Apple Creek, the rain washed away a section of the bank and there, among the pebbles, I found an Indian arrowhead. It was small and perfectly formed—the kind that was used to hunt birds and small animals.

"Well, my Indian friend," I said as he dried his bit of flint on my sleeve, "it has been a long time, hasn't it? How many years since you aimed this point at some ancestor of the rabbits I chased out of my garden all summer? Was it a day like this one? October—by whatever name you knew it?"

When I think of the Indians who hunted, fished, and fought here, it is always October in my imagination, perhaps because my father told me the autumn haze was smoke from their campfires. The arrowhead gave me a sense of continuity not of blood but of land—and the Indians and trappers, explorers, soldiers, and farmers who used it in their turn.

That night I gave the small point to Burt, Jr., who asked where I got it.

"From an old friend," I said, "who wants you to keep it as long as the river runs and the grass grows."

"That sounds like forever," he said.

"I hope so," I answered. "I really hope so."

FAMILY MONEY MANAGEMENT®

Peter Lindberg, Editor

Do you really benefit from bank credit-card plans?

The answer is yes—providing you use bank credit cards in the same budget-conscious way you use any form of credit. One of their strongest points is versatility; you can purchase goods and services—from corsages to car repairs—at any retail establishment in your bank's credit or charge-card plan.

Currently, bank credit-card plans are most active in the Southwest, the Midwest (especially around Chicago), and many sections in the East. Since most banks offering credit cards belong to a multi-bank system, chances are the card they offer you will be good in several surrounding localities. If, for instance, you belonged to one of Chicago's largest bank-credit card plans, your card would be honored by more than 60,000 merchants in Illinois, Indiana, and southwest Michigan. In fact, many bankers estimate that within a few years your bank credit card will be good almost anywhere in the country (and possibly in shops in some foreign countries as well).

Besides versatility, bank credit cards have some built-in budgeting advantages too. You're billed only once a month for purchases, whether you've made them at furniture stores, lumberyards, or beauty salons. Then you can pay them all by a single check made out to your bank, with no charge to you for bills paid in a 25- or 30-day period.

With most bank credit-card plans, you also can pay your bills in monthly installments. This lets you take advantage of special sales—and pay for large or seasonal purchases over a longer period of time. What you pay each month depends on your total bill. Under many credit-card plans, you pay \$10 a month, or $\frac{1}{24}$ of your total bill, whichever is greater. The monthly interest charge (generally about one or $1\frac{1}{2}$ percent) is figured on the monthly unpaid balance; at the $1\frac{1}{2}$ percent monthly interest rate, you'll be paying roughly 15 percent a year simple interest (comparable to most stores' revolving charge accounts). Of course, if you allow a large balance to be carried forward over a long period of time, you'll accumulate substantial interest charges.

You usually can get cash loans—often up to $100 or more—at your own or any other bank in your credit plan. They automatically become installment loans, carrying the same interest rate you pay on your charge purchases (except in states with lower interest limits). However, most credit-card plans have a $300-400 ceiling on your combined store charges and loans, which you can't exceed without authorization.

Just how do bank credit cards work? Several banks join together in a credit-card plan, and sign up stores and other businesses under an agreement to hold the cards of all banks in the group; individual banks, offering their own credit-card plans, make similar arrangements. The participating merchants usually pay the banks a small service charge based on the amount of charge-card business they produce. The banks, in turn, process the bills of charge-card holders and reimburse the stores, often within a day of the purchase.

Bank credit cards are not the same as "travel and entertainment" cards used largely by businessmen, or the convenience credit cards issued by large retail stores. Rather, bank cards are used mostly to charge purchases at medium-size or small businesses.

In most credit-card plans, there are limits on the amount you can purchase without verification. When you buy an item over a certain amount, say $10, the store often will call and check your credit-card account with your bank.

Now, some travel and entertainment credit-card operations are joining with bank credit-card plans, extending the customer credit coverage to businesses signed up with the banks. One feature of these cooperative credit cards is a "line of credit" provision, giving card holders almost instant installment loans ranging from $500 to $2,000 or more.

How can you turn your hobby into a business?

Converting your hobby into a business is much simpler than you might expect. And besides getting the chance to make money doing something you enjoy, you also can deduct expenses you're already incurring from your income tax. The range of hobbies that have been converted into businesses is wide, too; they run the scale from photography and woodworking to weaving and cooking.

Surprisingly, some of the least-likely-to-succeed hobbies turn into real financial winners. Take the case of the California woman who started going to sports-car rallies and races with her husband. To protect the finish on their sports car, she designed and sewed a trim cloth cover. Friends soon were asking her to make covers for their cars, so she turned out several more.

What started out as a hobby quickly became an obvious business possibility. Accepting the challenge, she paid a $50 state bond, spent $120 for material, and was in the car-cover business. During her first year, she sold $5,000 worth of covers—today, she owns a company that sells a million dollars worth of accessories for sports cars.

Of course, few hobby-into-business ventures have such a built-in Midas touch. Yet they do give you the chance to make some money doing something you really enjoy—and they could develop into a substantial second-income source or even a cushion for retirement.

Before you decide whether you want to convert your hobby into a business, you'll want to do some investigating.

Here are six basic areas to check out:

Find out if there is a market for what you plan to sell. No business should be started on nothing but fond hopes—it may end up costing you money in the short time.

Talk with someone who has had some experience with your kind of business. See how much they lost or gained, what their main problems were, and what expenses they had.

Contact the Small Business Administration, a federal agency that assists even the smallest kinds of businesses. They probably can give you additional valuable information.

Ask the SBA about the Service Corps of Retired Executives (SCORE). They are retired executives who will offer their knowledge—for a small fee—to budding businessmen.

Next, call your city hall and ask about zoning regulation. You might be prohibited from establishing a small business in your home. At the same time, ask about any licenses you may be required to have. For example, you might find your bank won't cash checks made out to your business name if you haven't filled out government forms indicating you are the owner of the business. Some banks also require a certificate of registration from the county where you've set up your new business.

Finally, make sure you have enough money to finance your business. As all small businessmen soon learn, businesses rarely bloom into rousing financial successes overnight. You probably will have to invest a fair amount of money in advertising and raw materials before your sales begin to mount up significantly.

Even then, you may well make only a modest profit from your work, if you take into consideration all your time, raw materials, investment, taxes, and selling costs.

Once you've made a basic appraisal of your hobby-in-business venture, be sure you know where you'll stand with the Internal Revenue Service.

First of all, you don't have to be engaged in your new business activity full time for the IRS to accept it as a business. Even if you only work at it an hour a week (provided that activity meets other broad IRS guidelines), you'll be allowed to deduct expenses connected with it.

As a general rule, though, IRS says you must be seeking to make a profit. However, when you're just getting started (and perhaps running in the red), you may wonder how IRS decides this, thus allowing you to deduct expenses connected with your former hobby. In most cases, they check you out in the following areas:

(1) Do you advertise? Generally an occasional, tiny advertisement in your local weekly newspaper won't qualify you. To IRS, advertising means a reasonably regular program.

(2) Are you selling anything? A small sale every other month or so isn't indicative of a business. IRS probably would hold that a business with such a sales record was really seeking to make a profit.

(3) Do you have a long record of years when you have made a profit? IRS can understand how a business can operate at a deficit during its first few years, but it becomes wary of a business that has losses every year for several years.

(4) Have you bought local or state licenses that permit you to operate a business? Someone who tells IRS he's in the bakery business—yet doesn't have a food handler's license—probably would be checked over carefully.

(5) Is your so-called business the kind of activity that could be considered a hobby? If so, you're far more apt to be challenged. For example, IRS and the courts have frequently taken a dim view of expenses and losses incurred in raising pure-bred dogs, racing harness horses, and the like, since they're more often thought of as hobbies. Even farming-expense deductions can be challenged if IRS feels you are using the farm primarily as a summer home, or for leisure-time activities. ■

HOW TO SHOP FOR YEAR-ROUND HEATING COMFORT

If your house is old enough to need a new forced-air furnace just about any unit you buy will be an improvement. Today models are quieter, cleaner, more efficient than their grandparents of 15 or 20 years ago.

But a furnace that's only a little better than your present one may soon be obsolete. Home buyers are rapidly coming to consider "luxuries" like central cooling, humidification and air cleaning just as necessary as central heating.

So don't simply replace your furnace; seize this opportunity to upgrade the climate all over your house.

Start shopping before your old furnace has breathed its last. Visit the showrooms of several heating contractors, compare the brands they handle, and make an evaluation of the service facilities. Pick up manufacturers' brochures and take them home for leisurely study.

Narrow the field down to two or three contractors; invite each of them out for an estimate. First, the contractor's representative may make a quick tour of the major rooms, then depart for the basement. Down there he scans the specifications plate on your present furnace.

FACT: His time is valuable, and he's learned from experience that many homeowners aren't interested in hearing about BTUs and mathematical formulas. They just want to know what it will cost.

But you should explain that you are interested—and that quality is just as important as money. Emphasize that you want an estimate for a top-notch system. But be sure to have him itemize the estimate so you can go over it later, and decide what to do without or postpone until later. That way you can tailor the job to your budget.

With these instructions, a good estimator will start working harder. After determining the size of your house in square feet, he'll note ceiling heights, number of windows, and the location of supply registers and air returns.

Tell him how your present furnace has performed. Are certain rooms chilly or too warm? Do people get shocked by static electricity every time they touch a door knob? How do your fuel bills compare with your neighbors'?

With these answers and some data on your house, the estimator can give you a thorough analysis.

"If you really want to go first-class," he begins cautiously, "I'd recommend what we call a 'total comfort' system. This includes a furnace, central air conditioner, power humidifier and an electronic air cleaner."

FACT: Don't be alarmed at the list of equipment he's reciting. The total price for it could come to well over $1,000, but you only need to buy the basics at first. And notice that now he's speaking in terms of a "system," not just a furnace. You should think that way, too.

"Your furnace," the estimator continues, "should be rated at 125,000 BTU. If winters were very cold here, or this house had tall ceilings or poor insulation, that BTU requirement would be a lot higher. Your house measures about 2,000 square feet, and you need about 50 BTU per square foot."

FACT: He's right on all points, though his arithmetic may seem peculiar. That's because furnaces are identified by their input ratings, which tell how much heat they produce internally. But the figure that counts most is the output rating—how much heat a furnace actually delivers.

A well-designed gas or oil furnace normally works at about 80 percent efficiency—so a unit rated at 125,000 BTU delivers about 100,000 BTUs of usable heat. To be sure the bids you're getting are truly competitive, specify that all estimates be based on output ratings.

"Now let me tell you about the cooling part of a total comfort system," the estimator says. "A 40,000 BTU unit ought to do a good job for you. But I'm afraid we'll have to do some extra work on your supply ducts. They just aren't large enough to carry cold air efficiently. I also would suggest moving that register in the hall and installing another return."

FACT: In most areas, a system needs bigger carrying capacity for cool air than for warm air. The estimator might go on to point out that in many older houses, the original ducting isn't very efficient even for heating—which accounts for cold floors or rooms that get stuffy when they're closed up.

Ductwork is sometimes expensive, but you can stretch out the cost of a complete system by having the sheet metal work done when the new furnace is installed, then waiting a summer or two before buying the cooling unit itself.

"What about humidity?" you ask. "This house gets bone-dry in the winter; in the summer the basement is damp."

"The air conditioner will do a good job of dehumidification," the estimator says. "And all but our cheapest furnaces come with evaporative humidifiers. These are little pans with several porous plates in them. The warm air soaks up moisture as it blows over the plates. But if you're bothered by static electricity, or cracking woodwork, or creaking floors, I'd recommend a power humidifier. This is a motor-driven machine that actually throws water into the heated air."

FACT: Cold air holds less moisture than warm air, so if winters in your area are cold enough for heating, you need a humidifier of some sort. Evaporative humidifiers can put up to three or four gallons of water a day into the air—enough for mild cold spells or small houses.

But if it gets colder, or your house is bigger, you may need as much as 16 gallons of water a day in the air—and that's a job for a power humidifier.

"I suppose a humidifier will eliminate the stuffy feeling we get in the winter, too," you say.

"It'll help some," the estimator replies, "but let me tell you about two simple modifications that will help a lot more."

"The first is to add a fresh air intake. All you need is a short duct from the return air plenum to the outside, with a damper for controlling the flow of fresh air into the system."

"My second suggestion is that we set up the furnace blower for continuous air circulation. The blower operates at a slower speed than the one in your present furnace, but it runs all the time, moving air whether the heat is on or not."

FACT: With a fresh air intake and continuous air circulation, the heating system builds up a slight but constant pressure inside the house, which helps counteract drafts. For more information about continuous air circulation, see the November 1966, issue of Better Homes and Gardens.

"And finally," the estimator says, "we can even do something about dust. By putting an electronic air cleaner into the return plenum of your new furnace, you can remove up to 99 percent of the airborne dust in your home."

FACT: An electronic filter can drastically reduce your cleaning bills, and it's particularly valuable if anyone in your family suffers from allergies. For an explanation of how it works, see the February, 1967, Better Homes and Gardens.

While the estimator totals up all the items on his clipboard, make sure he's including an installation guarantee, yearly maintenance contract, and free call-back service for balancing and adjustment just after the work has been done.

And when you're making your decision, keep in mind that a central air conditioner, electronic filter, and even a power humidifier are generally add-on units you can have installed later. So if you don't buy all the equipment at once, hold onto that estimate. It's your blueprint to year-round comfort.

FAMILY HEALTH

When someone in your family faces surgery

Gerald M. Knox, Health Editor

Americans are being wheeled into the operating room at the rate of about a million a month. More than one out of every ten of us will have surgery within the next two years—not counting obstetrical deliveries. The percentage of successes has never been higher, but the typical patient remains fearful and uncertain about many things connected with his case. Is surgery justified? Is the operation risky? What assurance exists that the surgeon knows his job? Better Homes and Gardens offers this article in an effort to answer questions most frequently raised when the family doctor recommends surgery.

The decision to operate

Other doctors are only kidding, of course, when they refer to surgeons as "the profession's gung-ho boys," whose slogan is "When in doubt, operate." But it is nonetheless true that some are quick to use a scalpel, and that many operations are performed every day that are medically unjustified. You don't want yours to be among them.

In certain emergency circumstances—acute appendicitis, say, or a ruptured stomach ulcer—it is apparent to any competent physician that surgery is needed at once; no time should be lost in debate. But in other situations, you should ask your family doctor—and also the surgeon he recommends—for complete explanations of your medical problem. Find out the procedures and risks that surgery would involve, the hopes it offers for improvement or cure, any alternative forms of treatment, and the probable consequences of doing nothing at all or of delaying the operation. All of these factors should be carefully weighed before you and your family reach a final decision.

A conservative approach is frequently best. Surgery once performed cannot be undone, and any operation involves at least a small risk. That's why most doctors, and the majority of conscientious surgeons, will advise you to put off an operation when other forms of treatment hold legitimate hope and if postponement does not imperil your health. Such judgments are matters of opinion, however, so always get the views of at least two physicians, and preferably three or even four if the operation is serious enough to warrant it (open-heart surgery, for instance). No reputable doctor will attempt to dissuade you from seeking these consultations.

Getting ready—psychologically and physically

In preparing yourself mentally for surgery, there are two common errors to avoid. One is to adopt a mock-heroic air, letting on that the operation is too trivial for notice, and pretending to yourself that you will emerge from the anesthesia feeling just as you did when you went under. Rarely does it happen that way. A certain degree of discomfort is involved, and patients who refuse to anticipate the fact may have trouble handling it later. The same goes for any kind of permanent change—in appearance, vitality, dietary habits—that surgery sometimes produces. The time to face up to such limitations is before they take effect, not afterward.

The other—and more common—mistake is to scare yourself out of your wits by allowing your imagination to exaggerate conditions. If you make a point of talking things over with your surgeon, he can usually eliminate unwarranted fears and put your legitimate concerns in perspective. Friends who have undergone the same type of surgery may offer to fill you in on the facts, but such accounts are inclined to be overly dramatic, often rife with inaccuracy. It is better, for your sake, to have a frank conversation with your surgeon. For one thing, such a talk can boost your confidence in him, which automatically makes your worries seem smaller.

Usually, a patient reports to the hospital the day before his scheduled operation. On admission, a blood sample will be taken for testing and a urinalysis performed. Sometimes these procedures are followed by other checks on the chemical composition of the body tissues or fluids. If a significant abnormality is found—say, an excess of sugar or of nonprotein nitrogen in the blood—surgery may be delayed for several days, during which the imbalance is corrected. Both surgery and recovery go more smoothly when the patient's body chemistry is normal.

If no postponement is indicated, routine preparations will continue. A nurse or orderly will shave the patient's body in the area where the surgeon will be working. Regardless of the site of the operation, eating and drinking are restricted or forbidden for ten or twelve hours before surgery; anesthesia is complicated when the stomach holds food. An enema is sometimes administered, and in cases of abdominal surgery, a tube may be introduced through the nose or mouth to remove digestive fluids from the stomach.

The anesthetist—and sometimes the surgeon as well—will visit the patient near bedtime. After a brief chat about the next day's procedures, the patient may receive a sleeping pill to guarantee a sound night's rest. In the morning, the anesthetist will again be on hand, this time to render the patient semiconscious with a stronger drug, perhaps an hour or so before the operation starts. This drug relieves the normal anxieties that accompany any patient to the operating room where deeper anesthesia is induced.

If the patient is a child

There is often more psychological than physical danger when a youngster undergoes surgery today. Young bodies recover fast, and with miniaturized equipment and modern anesthesia, surgeons can perform successful operations even on tiny premature babies. But if a child is emotionally stunned by the experience, it can leave him with deep fears he never loses.

In advance of an operation, parents should guard children against surprise and anxiety. Be honest in explaining what will happen, and why, and answer any questions your youngster may pose, but avoid unnecessary medical details and conceal your own apprehensions; they are too easy for a child to pick up. If the youngster is unfamiliar with the workings of a hospital, make sure he knows what to expect. Seeing a doctor in a white cap and face mask is frightening to the unprepared.

One tactic recommended by many physicians is to act out a make-believe operation at home, with the patient playing himself and other members of the family cast as doctors and nurses. Simulate the procedure as closely as you can by using makeshift hospital equipment—a table with wheels, surgical masks and gowns, a bright light inside the operating room, hypodermic needles, and so forth. Then when the child experiences the genuine thing—when the anesthetist approaches to give him an injection, or when he wakes up and sees himself covered with bandages—he is less likely to be scared. Many hospitals, if you ask a physician to arrange it, will take a youngster facing surgery on a tour of the premises. He becomes acquainted with the sights and sounds—and smells, it might be added; the aroma of medicine can upset a young patient as much as anything else.

The most opportune time for such visits and explanations is just a few days before the child enters the hospital for surgery. If you give a youngster longer than this to dwell on the subject, his imagination is likely to conjure up a host of false fears.

Who's who in the operating room

The surgeon you select to perform an operation is the head of a team of specialists. Their number is determined primarily by the specific procedure he plans.

For the simplest operations, he may need no other doctor to serve as his surgical assistant; he can handle the job by himself. More often, however, he'll have one or two assistants with the appropriate qualifications. Sometimes these men will be experienced surgeons assigned to an important special role. Other times, when the assignment is less difficult, they may be interns or resident physicians—young doctors who participate only in minor ways and spend the rest of the time observing the operation.

The scrub nurse stands alongside the operating surgeon, where she hands him whatever he calls for—instruments, sponges, sutures. The surgical supply nurse, stationed close to one wall, sees to it that this equipment is properly prepared and that an adequate supply is kept handy.

Two other nurses usually are present: the chief operating nurse, who directs the other nurses and who supervises preparations in the operating room, and the circulating nurse sometimes known as the "chase nurse," who goes out for more supplies when they are needed. Circulating nurse is also responsible for counting the sponges before an incision is sewed up.

Completing the team is the anesthetist, who not only administers appropriate anesthetics—and blood, when transfusions are necessary—but constantly monitors the patient's condition by closely watching his blood pressure, pulse rate, respiration depth and rhythm, and heart condition.

A word about anesthesia

Modern advances in anesthesiology have transformed this aspect of the surgical experience from a dangerous ritual crudely performed into a complex, sophisticated art.

Safety, which was once left mainly to luck, now gets first priority. The anesthetist's second principal goal is to provide the surgeon with optimum conditions for the procedure he undertakes. Modern anesthetics can change bodily rhythms in dozens of subtle, complicated ways to permit the successful use of delicate techniques no surgeon could otherwise attempt. Comfort is the third concern. From the time he dispenses a sleeping pill on the evening prior to the scheduled operation, until safe recovery from surgery is assured, the anesthetist alleviates pain and minimizes the chances of unpleasant side effects from the multitude of drugs he employs—muscle relaxants, amnesics, narcotics, and barbiturates.

As the practice of anesthesia grows ever more complex, choosing a competent anesthetist is increasingly important. Sometimes a nurse with special training and experience can perform a satisfactory job. But an anesthesiologist—a licensed M.D. with specialized training in the field of anesthesiology—is usually a better choice. Ideally, such a doctor will be board certified and a fellow in the American College of Anesthesiologists—assurance that his training in the field has been extensive and that he has passed stiff proficiency tests. Your surgeon, if you tell him you prefer an anesthesiologist, will select one as part of his team. It's smart to make your wishes known early, otherwise your surgeon might settle for someone else.

When someone in your family needs surgery

Very and operative care

There is usually an hour, or two or three hours, before the time a surgeon finishes his work and the patient goes to consciousness. He is that period in the recovery room, where a nurse and the anesthesiologist keep watch on his condition until his reflexes start coming again. He is then moved back to his hospital room where the process of recuperation begins.

Some possible obstacles to a patient's recovery are infection, and the need for nourishment. The first of the three, a great threat, is now minimized by a multitude of modern wonder drugs. Pain, instead of being eased by narcotics at any danger of drug addiction unless treatment extends for several weeks. But narcotics slow the healing process, so most doctors would prefer their patients avoid them if discomfort is severe. By narcotics, however, should a patient hide a pain. If you hurt, tell your doctor at once. But don't feel imposed upon if he asks you to endure the discomfort without drugs. He may also suggest you walk around when the pain is still painful. Early motion speeds recovery and diminishes the risks of blood clots or postoperative pneumonia.

Especially after operations on the digestive tract, eating and elimination will be bothersome. For the first few days, it is frequently necessary to give patients intravenously—by a slow drop through a needle in the arm. Food, when permitted, will be skimpy and bland and must be eaten very slowly. Later, an enema is often given, and a catheter may be inserted into the bladder to empty the body of waste. These procedures are never unpleasant, but they're seldom painful, either. In any case, it is only a few days until normal functions return.

How to pick the doctor and the hospital

The best way to assure a successful operation is to choose the right person to perform it. Fortunately, many patients make too hasty a choice. As a rule, according to estimates (experts), nearly half the operations undertaken in this country are in the hands of doctors unqualified to perform the operation.

One common mistake is to assume that all doctors who are legally permitted to attempt an operation are professionally equipped to do so. It just does not work that way. According to the law, any licensed physician, regardless of the nature and extent of his training, may attempt the most complex and difficult surgery.

In cold fact, however, the majority of doctors lack the necessary knowledge and experience for even routine, minor operations. Only 20 percent of American physicians have had any sort of specialized training in surgery—and many of these are qualified to perform only a few operations. And no wonder. There is a definite trend among surgeons away from general surgery toward greater subspecialization: in neurosurgery, orthopedic surgery, cardiac surgery, and so on. A surgeon who concentrates on repairing damaged hearts may have little experience in the removal of appendixes.

Generally, your search for a competent surgeon should begin with a talk with your family physician, the person best acquainted with your case. He will probably supply you with three or four names—surgeons he personally knows to be competent—and perhaps tell you a little about each. You should then try to interview the nominees in person, or telephone your county medical society and ask about each doctor's credentials. A hospital to whose staff a surgeon belongs can provide you with further information about his qualifications.

At some point, you should learn whether the surgeon is board certified and/or a fellow in the American College of Surgeons. If he is, you know his skill has been tested by experts and meets the highest professional standards. You can choose such a person with confidence. A doctor who lacks this formal approval may also turn out to be an excellent surgeon, but the odds are much less favorable, and it is wise to investigate his background very closely before engaging his services. When you're in doubt, favor the surgeon with specialty board certification.

He knows which skills the procedure will call for, and which people can best supply them. Teamwork in the operating room is too important to be left to chance.

The choice of hospital depends on which surgeon you choose, since you must pick an institution where he holds appropriate privileges. You should also make sure it is fully accredited by the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Hospitals—which is only a minimum guarantee that its staff is competent and that conditions are safe and sanitary. If you discover that your surgeon is not listed on the staff of any accredited hospital, it is better to change your choice of physicians than to settle for a non-accredited hospital.

When and how to cope with the bills

With surgery impending, many families find it hard to think of money. They regard it as heartless to consider the expense until the operation itself is safely over. But that attitude, despite the good intentions that inspire it, can lead to trouble. Hospital charges and physicians' fees should always be discussed in advance.

After his operation, a patient gets several bills. The surgeon sends a statement for his services, as do other physicians who assisted him inside the operating room. The hospital bill comes separately. Its basic figure covers only room and board, plus ordinary drugs and nursing care. The use of the operating room and its equipment, X-rays, hospital laboratory services, special drugs and medications—all these items are extra. Private nursing care and blood transfusions involve additional expense. Other bills will arrive from the anesthesiologist and from the doctor—usually the family physician—who recommended and supervised the operation.

Some of these bills, the surgeon's in particular, may be subject to negotiation. A surgeon often gauges the size of his fee to the patient's ability to pay. If you want one doctor's services but cannot meet his rates, he may agree to some suitable adjustment—lower charges, perhaps, or an extended payment plan, or some other appropriate measure. But he will naturally resent a request for concessions that comes after his job is finished. Talk to him well in advance. Be honest in describing your financial resources, and come fully informed about the coverage provided by your surgical and hospital insurance. Usually he can work something out.

Your family doctor can help you compute the full cost by estimating the length of your hospital confinement, the need for special medicine, the size of all incidental fees, and the time you'll be away from your job.

Hospital charges are less flexible. However, determining the prices beforehand—the cost of a single room compared to double, say—can lead to a number of economies. Also many hospitals have experts of insurance who can help you get full benefits from your policies.

There is a great variety in what insurance policies provide. You should make an effort to know how well you are covered in case of surgery. Some policies which have been in effect a long time are not realistic in terms of today's health costs. Hospital room and board benefits may be as low as $5 or $10 a day in some old policies; this doesn't help you much if your hospital is charging $30 a day. Most good basic hospitalization plans will give you at least 60 to 120 days of care in a semi-private room, paid in full to the hospital.

The best health insurance policies have surgical allowances that range from $300 to $600 for the most expensive procedures. At every level, however, from the removal of wart up to heart surgery, they will probably be somewhat lower than what the surgeon charges. There is little you can do about this, except to talk it over with your surgeon.

A serious illness may well require the services of more than one doctor. In addition to the surgeon, his assistants, the family doctor and the anesthesiologist, the surgeon may also need an internist to work on the medical aspects of your case. The internist may want a consultation with the cardiologist or a urologist if there are complications. If your policy is not limited to one doctor per illness—and you had better check to make sure it isn't—you can get your insurance to pay, at least in part, for these additional services. ■

TRIUNE—a Classic example of Drexel attention to thoughtful things: perfectly matched table leaves . . . skillful storage . . . unusual design and detail in veneer construction. Things like dining chairs with drop-seat comfort. As in Triune.

Drexel's Drop-Seat. We've cut a chair in half to show you how it works. And why it's uniquely comfortable. When you sit on the usual single layer of polyurethane foam—no matter how thick—you hit bottom on a rigid platform. With Drexel's extra sub-level of foam—see it?—you sit into the seat . . . not on it. Foam presses against foam. For longer life as well as superior comfort. And Drexel foam—the most stringently tested in the business—springs right back to its original contour. One more example of Drexel's never-ending effort to anticipate your pleasure . . . of the added thought and care that make Drexel the most trusted name in furniture. And so special for you.

CARS IN YOUR FAMILY

Duane L. Gregg, Automotive Editor

ENGINE TUNE-UPS—WHAT THEY SHOULD INCLUDE AND WHEN YOUR CAR NEEDS ONE

The big question in the minds of most motorists is how often a tune-up is really needed. And the manufacturers haven't done much to clarify the point in the owners' manuals. In fact, regular tune-ups are not required by any of the auto manufacturers to keep the extended warranties in effect. They realize that a good tune-up represents a substantial cost to the car owner and that a neglected tune-up really doesn't have much effect on the parts covered by the warranties. It will not hurt a car to go for long periods without a tune-up, so long as you change the oil and filter regularly and have lubrication attended to.

Why then, you may ask, should I spend the money for a tune-up that could be skipped? Simply this: a tune-up doesn't cost, it pays. Add up what it would cost to have a couple of service calls to start your car this winter plus the amount you'll save in gasoline bills as the result of a properly operating engine, and you will come up with an amount about equal to the tune-up cost.

If having a dependable car that's always ready to go means anything to you, you can't afford not to have it in proper tune. A car badly out of tune is no fun to drive either—it starts hard, idles rough, may stall easily and frequently, uses more gas, and lacks pep and response when you want to pass another car.

Engine, ignition, and fuel-system parts on a car wear out, get dirty, collect deposits, clog up, and stick. The purpose of a tune-up is to restore an engine as nearly as possible to its original performance level. Tune-ups are generally classified as major or minor, depending on how thorough a job is desired or needed. Some garages just offer a "tune-up"; in most cases, this single offering is more akin to the major tune-up.

A Minor Tune-up will generally consist of:

- Cleaning and regapping the spark plugs (replacing them if they've been in service about 12-16,000 miles). This mileage will vary according to the type of driving you do and the condition of the engine.
- Installing new points, condenser, and adjusting the timing.
- Adjusting carburetor idle speed and fuel mixture.
- Cleaning the air filter and crankcase vent (anti-smog) valve. This item is extremely important and needs attention on most cars each 4-8,000 miles.

A minor tune-up generally costs from $10 to $25, depending on your car and its condition.

A Major Tune-up should include all elements of the minor tune-up plus some additional work. The most important part of any good major tune-up is the compression check and/or cylinder leak test which should be performed first. Either of these checks will quickly divulge the condition of the head gaskets, valves, and piston rings. If excessive wear has occurred or if the gaskets are bad, even the very best tune-up is wasted unless additional work is done to correct the low compression. If the compression check is satisfactory, the mechanic should proceed with the elements of the minor tune-up plus the following operations:

- Checking operation of acceleration and choking systems, and correcting if necessary.
- Cleaning, tightening, and lubricating battery terminals to eliminate voltage resistance at the source. The current and voltage output of the battery should also be checked to give an idea of the general health of the battery.
- Servicing the air cleaner and replacing the element if necessary.

- Testing coil output capacity to assure high-voltage spark.

- Servicing manifold heat control valve to assure proper operation.

- Cleaning or replacing fuel filter as needed.

- Checking all rubber parts for deterioration or wear. This should include spark plug wires, radiator and heater hoses, and all belts. All belts should also be checked for proper tension.

In addition to installing points and condenser, the mechanic will remove the distributor to machine-check the gap and dwell settings, as well as the operation of the spark advance mechanism.

This more elaborate tune-up adds at least an hour to the labor charge and will probably add a few more parts to the bill. Better figure on $18 to $30 for a major tune-up. At about 40 to 50,000 miles, a complete carburetor dismantling, cleaning, and rebuilding is in order. This is sometimes included in the major tune-up; it will add from $16 to $25 depending on the carburetor type.

How often is a tune-up needed?

There is no hard and fast rule to follow—a lot depends on the age of your car, how much and what kind of driving you do, and how you feel about keeping your car in top-notch shape. The materials used in spark plug and distributor points are so superior to those used 10 to 15 years ago that it's not uncommon for plugs and points to last more than 12,000 miles under normal conditions without cleaning or adjusting.

For the ordinary 1,000 miles-a-month driver, a new car will perform nicely for about a year or more without requiring much attention, other than cleaning of the crankcase vent valve and air filter and any other items specified in the owner's manual. At about 12,000 miles, a minor tune-up is in order. Thereafter alternate major and minor tune-ups to have a major one at least every 20 to 25,000 miles. Continued on page 162

Thank goodness opening day was almost at hand. After months of grueling practice the team had finally reached its peak. But those uniforms! They were so dirty, they looked like they had been dragged through a swamp and then baked in the summer sun. Ugh! Just when things seemed hopeless, Mary (the coach's wife) introduced the boys' mothers to Intensified Tide and its unbelievable cleaning power. It was no contest. In their beautiful, clean, white uniforms our guys won going away. Did they play great because they looked great? All Mary'll say is, "Dirt can't hide from Intensified Tide."

Don't have a Pot Roast Dinner. Have a Pranzo di Manzo, instead.

To make the Antipasto:

It means "before the meal" and that's when you serve it. This Italian appetizer is really made of non-Italian things you may already have in the house. Like ham, olives, peppers, tomatoes and hard-cooked eggs. Serve on a platter with oil and vinegar, and that's an Antipasto.

To make the Frutta:

After a meal, Italians eat frutta. Plain fresh fruit. Serve yours with knives for peeling, and cheese alongside. Any combination will do (apples and Bel Paese is a good one). For this dessert, it's not what you serve that's Italian, it's the way you serve it.

To make the Pane:

Bread is pane (pah-nay) in Italian. Buy breadsticks, or a long thin loaf of "Italian Bread." Slice halfway. Then to make it even more Italian, dot with butter, parmesan cheese and a little garlic salt; wrap in foil and warm in the oven.

To make the Manzo: Pranzo di Manzo means "dinner of beef," but you don't have to know how to say it to make it. Because Chef Boy-Ar-Dee® makes a spaghetti sauce that's so Italian, it can make a pot roast Italian. Just cook the Chef's savory sauce right into the meat, the way Italians do. Let its special Italian spices and rich tomato goodness add their lively flavor to your roast. That's all it takes to make sure that instead of ordinary pot roast, this will be something special: real Italian Manzo.

3 pounds beef (pot roast cut)	2 tbsp. oil
1½ tsp. salt	2 cans Chef Boy-Ar-Dee
¼ tsp. pepper	Spaghetti Sauce with Mushrooms

1. Season meat with salt and pepper. 2. In a large heavy saucepan, brown all sides in oil. Pour off excess oil; pour on Chef Boy-Ar-Dee Spaghetti Sauce with Mushrooms. 3. Cover and cook slowly 2½ hours (or until tender). 4. Serve sliced with extra sauce poured on.

This room has an ugly ceiling under its new J-M upgrade ceiling.

The old ceiling may have been yellowed. Cracked. Stained. Or maybe just dull.

But a new J-M ceiling can do a lot more than just cover up ugliness. It beautifies a whole room. And often a lot more.

Some patterns soak up sound for places like family rooms. Others are completely scrubbable for places like kitchens. None of them ever need painting.

Installation is a snap, too. Some styles (like "Orient," in the picture) apply directly to an old ceiling, to cover things like cracks and stains. Some are suspended, to hide things like ducts and pipes, to create new living space.

You have over 20 J-M ceilings to choose from. Ask your dealer to help you. Or clip this coupon for many more ideas and useful information.

COPPER TILES

Richly gleaming solid copper tiles "warm up" a wall with a bonfire glow. Place the brushed-finish 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch square tiles in an alternate horizontal-vertical grain pattern for a checkerboard effect. There's a special mastic for metal tile; cost runs \$2.10 a square foot. Copper tiles also come with self-adhesive backs at \$3.69 per 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ square feet.

23 BEAUTIFUL, PRACTICAL WALL TREATMENTS

By Peg Rumely, Home Furnishings Editor and

PLASTIC VINYL

Washable, waterproof vinyl is a thrifty and easy way to rejuvenate almost any nonporous surface. It's self-adhesive, so all you need is scissors and your imagination. Follow these three steps. Cut to fit. Peel off backing. Press down and smooth out. Plastic vinyl comes in 18-inch-wide rolls at a cost of 49¢ a yard. This treatment combines two of the many patterns available—a travertine background with overlay strips of tortoiseshell.

Today, most anything goes on a wall: vinyl, wood, carpeting, tile, paint, paper, foil, bamboo, burlap, fiber glass, cork, felt, linoleum. Improved application methods make them simple to apply—durable finishes insure longer wear.

Our big portfolio runs the gamut—wall coverings for every room in your home—new walls, old walls, problem walls.

We show you how to do it . . . how much it costs . . . and the stunning decorating results. Inspired? Go to it! These are wall treatments you can do yourself.

For buying information, see page 12

CARPETING

Why not wall-to-wall carpeting on the wall? Its texture, pattern, color, and acoustical value make it an excellent choice. For decorative interest, apply the eight-foot-wide carpet to the wall with aluminum strips studded with brass upholstery nails. Cost for all materials is about $1 a foot.

PAIN

Painting a wall is hardly a new idea—so how about experimenting to get new effects? To duplicate this wall, use 4x8-foot sheets of $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch unfinished pine paneling. Nail into wall studs with finishing nails. Mix a small can of light blue paint with mineral spirits and wipe the paneled wall with this thin mixture. Let it dry thoroughly. Mix a small can of dark blue paint with linseed oil for an overglaze. Oil retards the drying and permits you to drybrush and cloth-wipe the paint until you get a pleasing design. A 4x8 panel costs \$15. Paint price depends upon brand.

 ...erpping. Many wallpapers today are either plastic coated
 ...bided. Some are pre-pasted, some strippable.

FIBER GLASS

Add architectural interest to the plainest of walls with three-dimensional fiber glass. Fiber glass simulates the look of many natural materials: brick, stone, barn siding, or the "cave rock" seen here. Sheets are 4x8 feet, with a nailing lip around the edge. The first step is to nail the lightweight sheet to the wall. Frame uprights are 4x4s. Top and bottom pieces are 1x3s with corners trimmed with quarter-round molding (see sketch). Stain frame before nailing to the wall. Cost of the fiber glass runs about 50c per square foot.

FOAM-BACKED VINYL

Smoothly polished black vinyl can turn an average wall into a bold, beautiful background with the look of sleek patent leather. This vinyl wall covering has a cushiony foam backing—it goes over almost anything and conceals bumps and other slight defects. Another advantage is its sound-deadening quality. To install, cut the vinyl into panels. Stretch one panel on the wall at a time—tacking lightly for temporary holding. Fold back a wide edge and apply adhesive, then press edge to the wall. Do this on all sides. Remove tacks when panel is secure. The decorative trim is four-inch-wide jute banding which comes in rolls. Glue jute to the vinyl along the panel seams and at top and bottom.

23 BEAUTIFUL, PRACTICAL WALL TREATMENTS

BURLAP

Rugged burlap is a natural for the wall of a child's room. Not only does it add a sweep of color—it can serve as a giant bulletin board. You can get burlap in 18-inch-wide rolls, $2 a yard, with a peel-off, self-adhesive backing. Over a dozen bright-as-a-child colors are available. Before applying burlap, nail composition board to the wall above the chair rail. This extra thickness helps muffle noise.

AREA RUG

If you have an area rug that looks like a painting, go ahead and hang it on the wall. Then go a step farther and frame it. This 4x6-foot rug is framed with six-foot-long 2x6 boards, stained dark. Rug is set flush to the frame. Inside the frame, fluorescent tubes at top and bottom light the stairway landing. The sketch explains the construction of the inner frame and tube installation. You can adjust measurements to fit any rug size. To hang frame, drill holes in back boards and screw unit to the wall. Total cost depends on rug.

23 BEAUTIFUL, PRACTICAL WALL TREATMENTS

CORK

Cork on the wall brings the interest of natural materials inside. For a unique pattern, you can split the nine-inch vinyl-coated cork squares down the middle with the grain. Then cement the pieces to the wall in a herringbone pattern. Cork runs $1.60 per square foot.

FOIL VINYL

Foil is welcomed in today's bathroom—thanks to plastic protection. It's as simple to apply as wallpaper—just paste it on or use the self-adhesive foil. It comes in 27-inch-wide rolls at a cost of about 17¢ per square foot. Foil vinyl is moistureproof, fade-proof, and scrubbable.

FABRIC-BACKED VINYL

Making the biggest stir among today's decorative wall coverings are vinyl-coated fabrics. These wall coverings offer the pattern variety of fabric, plus never-before durability and practicality. You'll need a special adhesive to apply them. Fabric-backed vinyl comes in 48-inch rolls; the simulated leather treatment seen here costs about 25¢ a square foot.

ROSEWOOD

Rosewood paneling can transform a neglected wall into one of timeless beauty—the focal point of a room. For a dramatic finishing touch, use dowel battens to secure panels to wall. Place 1½x¾-inch battens two feet apart on the 4x8-foot groove panels, and countersink expansion screws on 6-inch centers of the battens (see sketch). Plug holes with ¾-inch dowels left protruding ¼ inch. Stain dowels a natural finish. Rosewood paneling is expensive—$100 a panel—you could use another wood

CERAMIC TILE

If you can paste pictures in a scrapbook, you can make a tired bathroom sparkle with ceramic tile. Try this: line the bathtub niche with a block plaid pattern using gray, white, and black tiles to give a clear, crisp look. These neutral colors make any accent color possible. (We like the punch of red.) After cementing to the wall, complete the job by grouting. Tiles are $4\frac{1}{4} \times 4\frac{1}{4}$ -inches standard size. Ceramic tiles cost about 60¢ per square foot. Or use plastic tiles—they cost less than 22¢ per square foot.

2. BEAUTIFUL, PRACTICAL WALL TREATMENTS

MIRROR TILES

A glittering, shimmering wall of tiny mirrors reflects elegance and suggests seriousness in an entry foyer. The 1/2-inch-square mirrors come in 16x18-inch sheets with a rubberized backing for easy handling. You'll need to use special mirror mastic to attach the sheets to the wall, since other adhesives might break the mirror's silvering. The approximate cost is $4 a square foot. If you like the mirror idea, but find this treatment too expensive, you can use the 2 1/2-inch mirror tiles available six to a sheet for about $9.

BAMBOO

A bamboo wall is an easy, inexpensive way to give a basement recreation room an outdoor feeling all year round. First paint the wall with a below-grade paint. Bamboo is an outdoor kind woven with galvanized wire. It is available in a 15-foot roll, 6 feet high, for $1.50 a roll. Put the bamboo on wall by rolling it as you go along, securing here and there with concrete nails. To finish, use extra pieces of bamboo for base molding.

THE GARDENES AND GARDENS, NOVEMBER, 1967

For buying information, see page 134

PARQUET

You usually think of solid oak parquet as a mellow, rich flooring—but it makes a striking wall treatment too. Looks difficult? It isn't! Parquet comes in easy-to-handle nine-inch squares you apply with tile cement. This treatment is good for covering a badly scarred wall. For a pleasing effect, lay the parquet squares in alternate-grain patterns. Platform is built of plywood sized to the nine-inch parquet squares. Cost? Parquet tiles, 9x9 inches, cost 78c each. For an 8x10-foot wall, the cost is less than $60, including cement, plywood, and edging for the base platform.

BEAUTIFUL, PRACTICAL WALL TREATMENTS

HARDBOARD

Here's a wall treatment that can travel! Use these portable hardboard wall panels in units or expand to an entire wall by merely adding on in either direction. The 2x6 uprights are slotted to accept alternating 16-inch wormy chestnut panels and 6-inch walnut panels. The narrow vertical insets have fascia boards to hide small spotlight fixtures and adjustable glass shelves. The 16-inch units are held together by strips at the back. Adjustable furniture glides hold the panels to the ceiling. See our sketch for construction details. To move or store, loosen the ceiling glides and separate the panels.

TEXTURED PAINT

Rough, porous concrete basement walls are ideal surfaces for textured paint—the rougher, the better. To duplicate the wall treatment above, make cutouts from brick vinyl floor tiling and cement to the wall in a random pattern. Cover bricks with a masking tape. Generously brush or roll textured paint onto the wall and—while paint is wet—pat with a wadded newspaper or coarse sponge. Work on the wall until you have a texture you like. When paint is dry, remove the masking tape. For a finished look at the base of the wall, nail or cement on wood molding painted white.

CARPET TILES

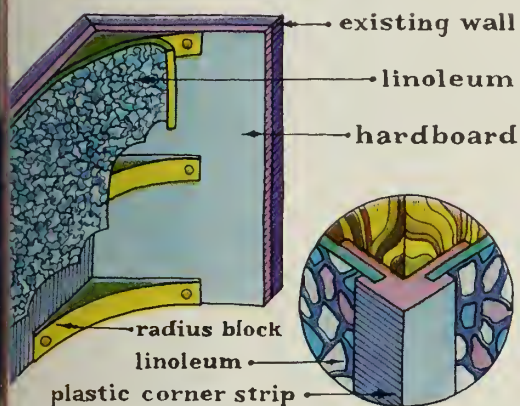

Color, texture, pattern, and even some acoustical value are possible in a wall laid with indoor-outdoor carpet tiles. Especially easy to install are the foot-square tiles laid full size, or knife-cut for unique designs. This blue-green wall scheme veers away from the usual checkerboard pattern; it's easy to install if you preplan on paper. Tiles cut into pieces three, six, and nine inches wide are used with the full squares. To apply, use double-face tape or a special adhesive. Each of the foot-square carpet tiles costs about 79c.

FELT

Felt-covered wall in striking modern design can add sophistication and dash to a living room. Here strips of wood, lacquered black, frame multicolored panels of felt. Work the design out on paper first, sizing to the wall dimensions. Apply felt directly to the wall with adhesive, and secure the framing strips with finishing nails. Designer felt may be purchased in 72-inch widths at $2.27 a yard.

NOLEUM

Light up a dark basement by lavishing the same bright linoleum on floor and walls. To divide work and play areas, you can extend a wall plaster with a box frame covered with the linoleum. Plastic stripping hides seams. Our sketch shows how linoleum fits into plastic strip corners. Coving of corners is detailed in separate sketch. Linoleum comes in 12- and 9-foot rolls. Cement the 12-foot width as seamless flooring, and use the 9-foot width on walls. Prices vary according to linoleum quality.

PLASTIC-FINISHED HARDBOARD

Give a new face to a powder room with random-grooved, plastic-finished hardboard paneling. It's a refreshing departure from the usual floral backgrounds—and a great way to cover cracked plaster, soiled paint, or old wallpaper. This washable paneling comes in 4x8-foot sheets and can be applied to the wall with finishing nails slightly countersunk. (Fill the holes with a dab of paint.) Each panel costs $9.50, and four panels can easily cover a small room.

SEVEN SUBDIVISION HOUSES—HOW THEY GREW

By James A. Hufnagel, Associate Building Editor

Hollin Hills is a Virginia suburb of Washington, D. C. About 400 families live there. Building began—as in many other places—in 1949, and it hasn't stopped yet.

First came the houses—neat, contemporary, but small by today's standards. Then came the families—young couples mostly, with small children or no children at all.

The families grew, and so did their houses . . . a bedroom addition here . . . a family room there . . . a new entry. In time, streets of similar houses began to look like neighborhoods of custom homes.

If you live in a subdivision, maybe the same thing has happened near you. If not, maybe you're the one to start a trend.

To get you started, we've selected seven of the best additions in Hollin Hills. All were added to very basic house plans—chances are they'd work for you, too.

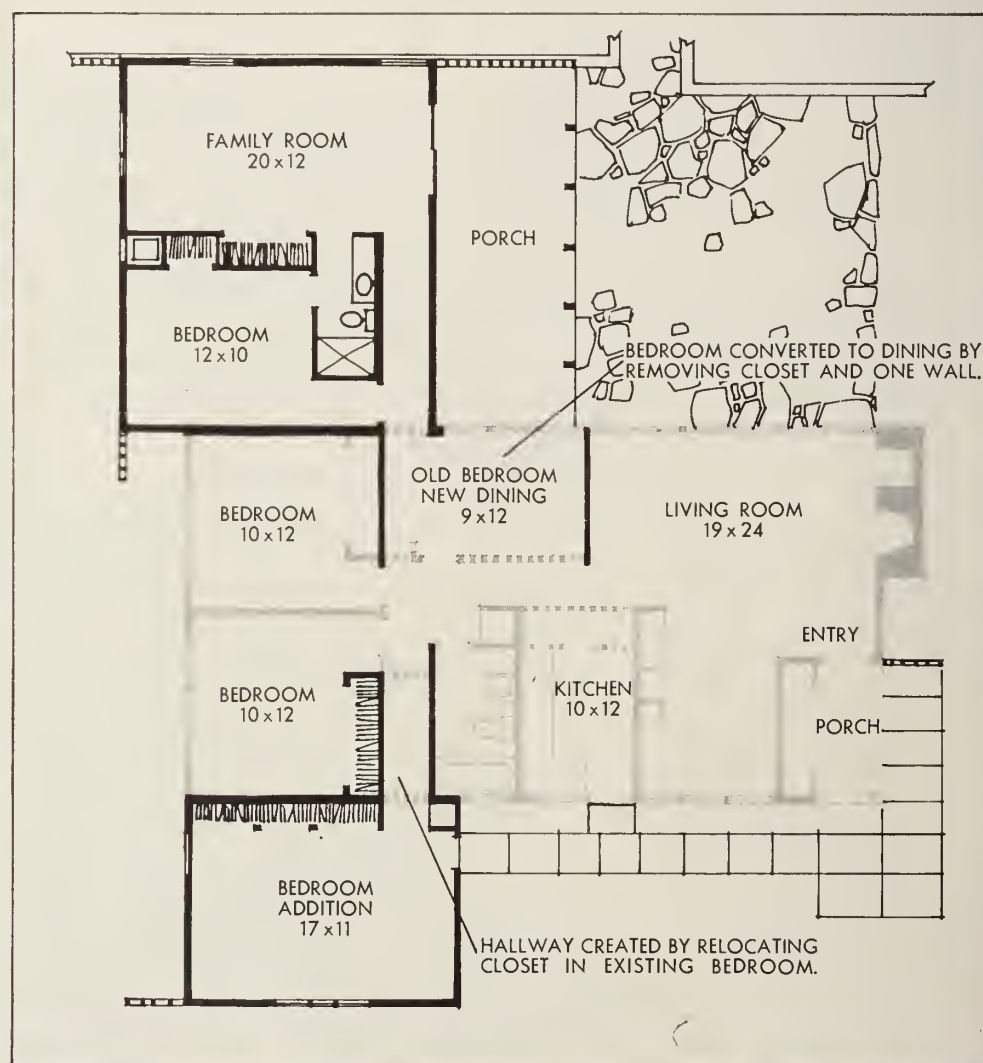

Above: Here's the basic house many Hollin Hills families bought. In 1,200 square feet it has two or three bedrooms, a bath, kitchen, and living-dining area.

Everything fits into a 48x25-foot rectangle—outlined by gray lines on the plan at right—which has a notch cut from the corner at far right for an entry porch. The simple design makes it possible to add on at the front, back, sides—anywhere more space is needed.

Right: Look what two additions do for the basic plan. The owners pushed out in front to gain a master bedroom, and again in back for a family room, bath, and child's room. One existing bedroom was shortened for a hallway; another was converted into a separate dining area. The old dining area makes an ideal spot for the homeowners' baby grand piano.

Below right: In front, the flat-roof addition makes it hard to recognize the original, pitched-roof house. Trellises on either side make it seem wider.

Photographs: Lisanti Architects; Cross and Adreon, A.I.A. Original Houses: Charles M. Goodman Associates, A.I.A. Source: Kit Tyson

re: The rear addition also has a flat roof with trellises, along with a gallery-like porch. Sliding glass doors connect the hall (left) and family room to the spacious, two-story living areas.

Skylights in the porch roof brighten the interior and add a futuristic look to the symmetrical design.

Those windows at left—part of the original house—give the living room and new dining area a view of the patio.

Above: Though it has a beamed ceiling, tile floor, plenty of storage, and all the other accouterments of a good family room, this end of the addition could easily be furnished as a master suite.

The door at right (beside the plant) leads to a second bath, which is also accessible from the smaller bedroom.

Together, the two new wings increase the size of the basic house by more than 650 square feet. Continued on page 149

CHRISTMAS CRAFTS FOR CHILDREN

By Margo Garrity, Crafts and Home Sewing Editor

Any child old enough to be entrusted with a pair of scissors should find these two projects fun and easy to do. And when he's finished, he'll really have something—to give, to bedeck the house, or to sell for a neighborhood fund-raising project. Ingredients for ornaments? String, glue, and water-base paint. Just as satisfying (and far less messy) are those paper posies that require no planting or hoeing—they're inexpensive, too.

1 Organize materials on a table that's protected by several thicknesses of wrapping paper or newspapers. Pour $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of creamy white glue into an aluminum pie pan or bowl. Cut the cord into yard lengths, then let it soak in the glue until it becomes thoroughly moistened (about 15 or 20 minutes). Pull string through fingers to remove excess glue before starting on next step.

2 Wrap cord tightly around cardboard tubes (pressed into several shapes), pencils, wood dowels, plastic bottles, or the like. Let the cord dry stiff, and carefully remove it by cutting with a single-edge razor blade, scissors, or knife. Next, glue the ends of each piece together, making a closed loop. Combine small and large pieces in designs as shown. Set ornaments aside to dry.

3 To make the bird or Christmas tree shapes, prepare each design from piece of string dipped in glue as before (Free-form it onto a piece of waxed or freezer paper.) Extra string parts may be glued to the larger shape. Let dry until string is firm and stiff. Glue a small round loop at the top of the ornament for hanging onto your tree. Copy other shapes found on Christmas cards.

4 After glue dries and you have the desired shapes, paint each ornament with water-base paint in several harmonious colors. To preserve ornaments, coat each with clear colorless nail polish or spray with a clear plastic spray. For fancy effects, rub with white glue after preservative dries, then sprinkle with glitter. Let the ornament dry; gently shake off excess glitter.

For large, full flowers, cut an entire package of crepe paper in half across grain. Cut into shapes as shown. For variety, petal edges can be feathered by cutting small slits about $\frac{1}{8}$ inch apart. For stems, straighten a wire coat hanger with pliers; turn one end down about $\frac{1}{2}$ inch to form small hook (this keeps flower from slipping off end). Vary length of stems, if desired.

2 Wrap wire with floral tape, or spiral crepe paper strips down the wire. Centers are artificial blooms, dried pods, or pine cones fastened to one end of wire stems. (Or make stamens from fine wire, covered with paper.) Unfold paper; shape petals by stretching center of each petal. Pleat or gather the paper around stem clockwise, cupping into petals as you go.

4 To achieve this flowerland fantasy, vary the shapes of leaves and petals by combining several shades of paper. As you become more adept, you'll discover as many variations as there are flowers! Try cutting each petal separately, then attaching to stem with glue. Or combine buds and blooms on same stem. Attach each leaf to stem with a piece of floral tape.

A VERY SPECIAL TWO-STORY HOUSE

By Noel B. Seney, Building Editor

Here's a house you can adapt to any mode of living that suits you—whether you dress for dinner or lounge around in sneakers. In 2,350 square feet, you get lots of airy openness, yet plenty of privacy where it really counts.

Overall dimensions are 48 feet by 58 feet.

Below: Haberdashers tell us the well-dressed man wears a hat when he goes out. This well-dressed house wears a hat all the time—a cantilevered mansard roof. The roof, just four feet out from the house, contributes balance and completeness to the vertical thrust of the bleached redwood siding.

For privacy, a single narrow window faces the street and passersby. The side view discloses a warmer aspect of the house's personality: generous windows, an inviting covered entry, double-entry doors.

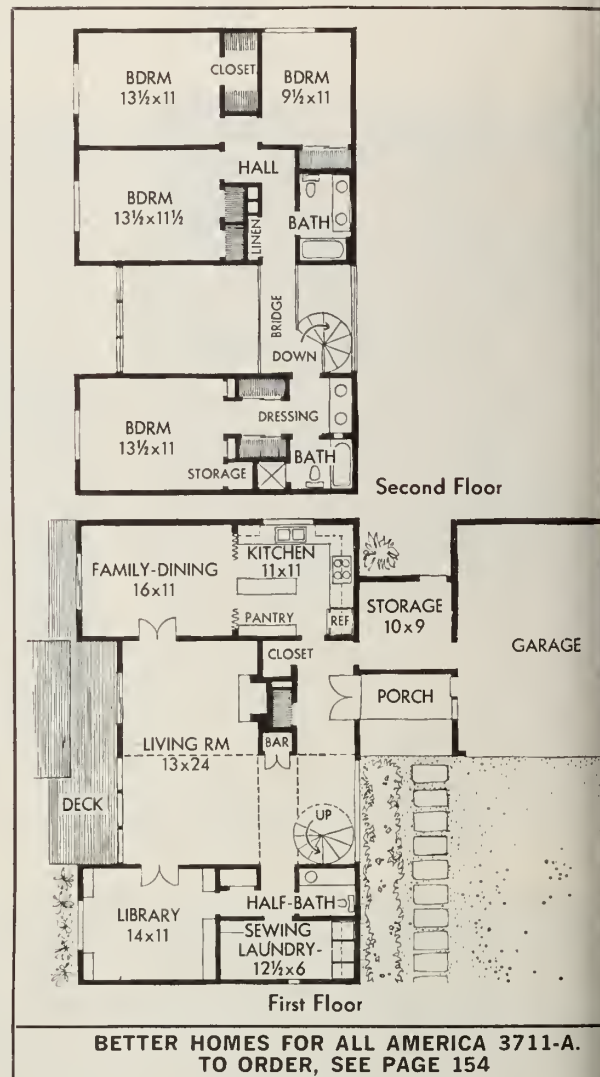

Plan: Downstairs, openness rules the roost. The living room forms a large capital L with the entry; at a very large party you could even open up the family room.

The family room and the kitchen create an open informal area for eating and recreation—a perfect combination for families with young children.

Upstairs, privacy governs the layout. The upper reaches of the living room and the entry separate the master suite from children's bedrooms; only the bridge connects them. Both parents and children have a full bath; the master bath includes a deluxe dressing room.

Designer: John D. Blood

Photographs: Bill Hedrich, Hedrich-Blessing. Builder: Fritz Gookin. Landscape architect: Heard Gardens

On the other side of the house, sets of sliding glass doors and spacious deck promote outdoor living, contrast sharply with the reserved appearance of the front.

At a party, combine the deck with the family room or the living room; during the day, turn it into a playground. Since you can see the deck from practically every room in the house, you can monitor children's activities without suspending your own.

A SPECIAL TWO-STORY

Continued

Left: The library is accessible from either the living room or the hall (see plan), but its location in the quietest corner of the house separates it from the mainstream of family activities. Built-in bookshelves surround a solitary glass door. On the wall opposite the bookshelves, matching units house TV and music equipment.

With the half-bath nearby, the study also functions as a guest room with the simple conversion of a sofa bed.

Below: In a big room you need big windows, and this room has them. Each of the three windows is 12 feet 8 inches high and 4 feet wide. Together they flood the room with wall-size light, present a panoramic view of the yard, and bring dramatic perspective to the 17-foot ceiling. Across the living room, an identical set of windows commands a view of the entry.

When you entertain in a room this size, smoke and noise are lost in space—but guests feel right at home.

Right: Under an eight-foot ceiling, the living room exchanges vaulted elegance for quiet intimacy. Though distinct in character, the two sections of the living room are united by the architectural and decorative elements they share: the tile floor, the oriental rug, the white-painted walls.

The bridge links the master bedroom with the rest of the second floor, makes a unique gateway between the living room and the entry.

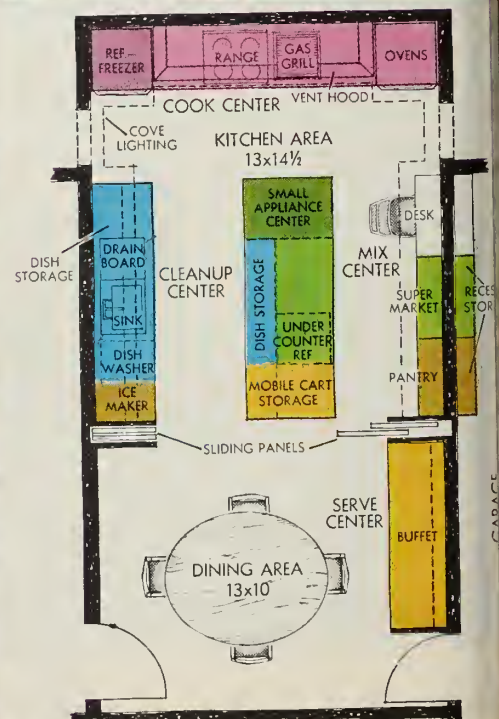

Circular stairs maintain the openness between the living room and the entry. The hallway beneath the bridge leads to a half-bath, the laundry/sewing center, and the library.

A BEAUTIFUL KITCHEN IN EVERY WAY!

By Helen A. Dawson, Kitchens and Equipment Editor and Georgia V. Young, Associate Editor

For buying information, see page 1

Photograph: Hopkins

Designed for family living, this kitchen is sure to brighten your spirits and lighten your work. Dashing blues and reds with red and white lure everyone—both family and guests—to join the fun. This room is ready to take on anything, with plenty of space for two or twenty to work and chat around the giant, 3x9-foot island. All surfaces are chosen to withstand hard use—and come up smiling with minimum care.

If you're inspired to "do something" about your own kitchen, here's proof you can mix or match the new with the old. Both traditionalists and moderns can claim this timeless kitchen with its subtle blend of warmth and big fashion. Designed and decorated by the editors of Dear Homes and Gardens as an additional test kitchen for their home office, this room will accommodate two or more economists.

Throughout, you'll find ingenious new ideas and new products you can adapt to your kitchen. For example: walls that look like brick are really covered with vinyl in a convincing imitation. A conventional scoop-shaped hood (fan and lights inside) is paneled first with hardboard, then covered with striped wallpaper; interior of stainless steel stays clean. Elegantly detailed pewter hardware is reminiscent of Mediterranean crafts.

Contemporary cabinets are enameled wood. That regal red carpeting can take kitchen abuse. It's moistureproof and flat-napped for easy vacuuming.

Room glows bright as day or soft as candlelight with multiple lighting. A pair of 3x4-foot panels "float" in the acoustical ceiling. A valance circles the room with light, six inches below the ceiling.

Floor plan: No space-wasting, deep corners to clean. No unnecessary cross-traffic. No peninsula or U-shaped cabinet arrangements to walk around. Instead: straight paths lead to and from any part of kitchen. Dining area becomes a separate room when floor-to-ceiling plastic panels slide across concealed ceiling track.

Each of the five storage sections houses a self-contained work center, so walking is kept to a minimum. Sink separates cleanup from food preparation—refrigerator-freezer is but a step away. Cooking and broiling (on the gas-fired grill) are next, along end wall. Just-introduced gas range has a self-cleaning oven.

Mix-bake center makes prime use of island. It is flanked by ovens, backed by tall food pantries, and has cook book storage above desk. Serving center includes buffet, ice-maker near sink, and end of island which opens to park a mobile cart. More on page 126

TURKEY DINNER —NEVER EASIER THAN THIS

Here's a meal planned to please those pepped-up fall appetites. In fact, it's so easy, you'll want to remember to serve this menu all year round.

Let sharp-sweet cranberry juice cocktail set the scene. Then bring on golden turkey—a breeze to fix and to carve when you choose boned and rolled turkey roast. If it's dinner for 12 or more, twin roasts—the 2½- to 3-pounders—are your answer. One will do for a family-size meal.

Rice Mushroom Medley, which here shares a divided dish with buttered peas, is the ideal plate-mate for the turkey. You start with long grain and wild rice mix; then for a flavor boost, add celery and mushrooms.

Make this cool, fresh-flavored Grapefruit-Avocado Mold in advance to avoid last-minute bother. Offer a basket of hot Hurry-up Butterhorn Rolls, made with yeast and packaged biscuit mix, to round out the feast.

And for dessert, Pecan Raisin Pie, with a bonus of plump raisins hiding under the crunchy nut top. Serve with coffee—and watch the smiles.

You'll find recipes and how-to hints for the complete meal, on a page punched to fit your cook book—see page 113.

TEN LUSCIOUS DESSERTS...TWO TEMPTING BREADS...AND A QUICK HOT DRINK—ALL CHOCOLATE

Each one of these tempting creations is chock-full of chocolate—and incredibly good down to the last crumb (or sip). Your only problem: which delectable treat to try first.

You just can't go wrong when chocolate cake is your choice. For a truly elegant dessert, make our lofty Double Mocha Cake. A superb blend of chocolate and coffee makes the cake a noble contender for top flavor honors. Add a fluffy, coffee-accented seven-minute frosting and a ring of perky little chocolate curls, and you have a double-mocha masterpiece.

COFFEE-TOFFEE SQUARES

MARBLE-TOP CHOCOLATE RUM PIE

If you just can't get enough chocolate, Coffee-Toffee Squares are your answer. This tri-level special from the freezer features chocolate goodness in every layer—the crust of chocolate wafer crumbs, the creamysmooth chocolate-coffee filling, and the topper of crushed chocolate-covered toffee bars.

Brazilian Chocolate, pictured with the Coffee-Toffee Squares, is our entry for the blue ribbon in the beverage class. This ready-in-no-time drink starts with chocolate syrup. The Brazilian touch: instant coffee powder and a bit of cinnamon. For that frothy top, give the drink a quick whirl with your beater just before serving.

For a make-ahead dessert you'll serve with pride, choose Marble-top Chocolate Rum Pie. Guaranteed to wow even the most sophisticated chocolate fans. You spoon luscious layers of a semi-sweet chocolate-rum mixture and whipped cream into the baked pastry shell—then gently swirl in additional whipped cream to marble the top. The pie waits happily in the refrigerator till dessert time. For a real show-stopper, garnish with a generous dollop of whipped cream and chocolate pieces.

Another slice of the cake is visible in the background.

FIVE FESTIVE CHOCOLATE DESSERTS

All party-pretty, these desserts are certain hits anytime. A good example—Chocolate-Pecan Cornucopias. You fill little pastry cones with whipped cream flecked with sweet chocolate and pecans. Then perch a pecan half on each one for a final flourish.

For our Chocolate Marshmallow Parfait, layer vanilla ice cream with a sauce that's easy as 1-2-3. You make it with evaporated milk, semisweet chocolate pieces, and marshmallow creme. Then you crown this regal dessert with shreds of coconut toasted golden brown.

It's hard to improve on a combination of chocolate brownies and coffee ice cream! But frost that luscious combo with a high meringue, sprinkle with chopped nuts, brown quickly in the oven, and you have a sensation—Brownie Alaska.

Chocolate-Mint Fluff is especially delicious when spooned onto big slices of angel cake. Simply whip together cream, pre-sweetened cocoa powder, and peppermint extract. Pass some crushed peppermint stick candy for the tasty garnish.

For a sundae standout, try Chocolate Walnut Sauce over chocolate ripple or vanilla ice cream. Butter-toasted walnut pieces make this milk chocolate sauce extra special.

REALLY NEW WAYS WITH CHOCOLATE!

Be prepared for the role of trend setter when you feature these tasty recipes. Cocoa Ripple Ring is proof that chocolate has many "personalities." Here you ripple a mixture of cocoa, sugar, and nuts through a tender coffee cake for a sure scene-stealer at a kaffee klatsch or brunch.

Or delight friends or family at luncheon with walnut-studded Chocolate Date Nut Bread. You soften the dates first in boiling water so their subtle flavor enhances every crumb. Choose butter curls or cream cheese to spread on slices of this bread that's almost like cake.

Remember Chocolate Dot Waffles for a different dessert. Semi-sweet chocolate pieces scattered through the tender-crisp waffles offer a sweet surprise in every bite. Top with whipped cream, or dairy sour cream, and shreds of bright orange peel—then pour big mugs of coffee.

Your classic devil's food cake will get a royal welcome when it debuts as Cherry Devilicious Cake. Blend cream cheese, sugar, and a little milk for the snow-cap atop each cake square. Spoon on a warm Bing cherry-Burgundy sauce, and you're set to finish any meal in a decidedly "devilicious" manner.

CHOCOLATE CHECKLIST

Here's a picture-guide to the chocolate "family." It all begins with the cacao bean (at front, picture 1). These seeds of the cacao tree are processed into chocolate liquid—the base for the whole array of chocolate and cocoa products.

1. Bitter Chocolate—also called unsweetened, baking, or cooking chocolate—is the pure chocolate liquid, cooled and molded. Comes in one-ounce squares (back), eight per package. Try, too, the semi-liquid mixture of cocoa and cocoa butter or vegetable fats (front). The one-ounce envelope equals one ounce melted bitter chocolate.

2. Cocoa Powder (center), prized for flavoring beverages and desserts, is the part of the chocolate liquid left after most of the cocoa butter has been removed. Just as its name implies, the Ready-to-use-Cocoa Powder (right) is already sweetened and flavored for you. Try Dutch Process Cocoa (left), too. This is darker and has a somewhat bolder chocolate flavor—also comes in ready-to-use form.

3. Sweet Chocolate is delicious to eat, or to use in desserts. Made from chocolate liquid with sweetening and extra cocoa butter. Usually comes in bars.

4. Semisweet Chocolate is made like sweet chocolate. Choose squares (left) or the popular "pieces" (right). Good nibbling, and perfect for cooking.

5. Milk Chocolate is best known as "eating" chocolate, in bar form (front) or as candies (in dishes). Also comes in chunks. Similar to semisweet chocolate, but has milk or cream added.

6. Chocolate Syrup (right) is a chocolate- or cocoa-flavored mixture of sweetening, water, salt, and other flavorings. Chocolate Sauce (left, and on the sundae) is a close relative, but has milk, cream, and/or butter added. You'll find flavor combos, too (chocolate-mint, chocolate-caramel, etc.). Great dessert toppers.

THIS IS THE HOUSE THAT DAD BUILT

Photographs: Hopkins. Designer: David Ashe

Stumped for a Christmas gift for the junior homemaker in your family? Here's a pint-sized Better Home you can assemble in a few evenings, yet its basic construction is sturdy enough to last until she's rearranging full-scale furniture.

Top left: To get inside, just lift off the peaked roof. Slotted walls and movable partitions make it possible for the young lady to instantly remodel the interior—there are dozens of different floor-plan combinations.

Center left: Make the 19 pieces of furniture from lumber scraps and bits of hardboard, then give each of them a quick squirt of paint from an aerosol can. Saw kerfs, staples, brads, and tacks serve for the hardware and other details.

Above: The chimney doubles as a handle, so when bedtime arrives, the dollhouse can be pressed into service as a portable toy chest. It measures 25 inches long, 18½ inches wide, and 15 inches high, including the chimney-handle.

TWIN TURKEY ROASTS

Prepare two 2½- to 3-pound rolled turkey roasts according to package directions. You'll want to allow about ⅓ pound turkey roast for each serving. If directions call for thawing turkey before roasting, insert meat thermometer in center of thawed roast. Frozen meat must be roasted for a time before thermometer can be inserted. Turkey is done when internal temperature reaches 185°. For best slicing results, allow roast to stand about 10 minutes after removing from oven.

TURKEY ACCOMPANIMENTS

ASSORTED RELISHES

Be sure to have a bowl of ice water handy when cutting vegetables. A quick chill in the water gives that perky crispness. Crab apples, pickle sticks, and ripe olives complete the attractive array—Radish Roses: Cut off roots. Using tip of paring knife, cut four or five thin petals around each radish.

Radish Mums: Cut off roots. Slice down center of each radish, not quite through. Make another cut, not quite through, at right angle to the first. Make two more cuts to give eight petals.

Celery Fans: Cut tender celery stalks in 3- to 4-inch lengths. Make parallel cuts close together from one end almost to the other. Or slit both ends almost to center.

Carrot Curls: Pare carrots. With vegetable parer, cut thin lengthwise strips of carrot. Rest carrot on board; pare away from you. Roll up long slices; fasten each with a wooden pick.

GRAPEFRUIT-AVOCADO MOLD

1 1-pound can (2 cups) grapefruit sections
2 envelopes (2 tablespoons) unflavored gelatin
1 cup cold water
 $\frac{1}{8}$ teaspoon salt
2 7-ounce bottles lemon-lime carbonated beverage
1 avocado

Drain grapefruit, reserving syrup; add enough water to make 1 cup liquid. Soften gelatin in syrup mixture; cook and stir till gelatin dissolves. Stir in the 1 cup water and the salt; chill till cold but not set. Add carbonated beverage and about 3 drops green food coloring. Pour about $\frac{2}{3}$ cup of the mixture into lightly oiled $5\frac{1}{2}$ -cup ring mold. Peel and thinly slice $\frac{1}{8}$ of the avocado; arrange slices in bottom of mold. Chill till gelatin is almost set; chill remaining gelatin till partially set. Halve grapefruit sections. Seed and peel remainder of avocado; cut in $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch cubes. Fold grapefruit and avocado into partially set gelatin; pour into mold. Chill till firm. To unmold: Loosen edges with tip of spatula. Dip mold just to rim in warm water for a few seconds. Tilt mold slightly to loosen gelatin. Place chilled serving plate upside down over mold; holding plate and mold together, invert and lift off mold. Chill till serving time. Makes about 12 servings.

HURRY-UP BUTTERHORN ROLLS

Dissolve 1 package active dry yeast in $\frac{3}{4}$ cup warm water. Stir in $2\frac{1}{2}$ cups packaged biscuit mix; beat vigorously. Turn onto surface dusted with biscuit mix; knead till smooth, about 30 strokes. Cover; let rest 10 minutes. Roll to a 12-inch circle; cut in 16 wedges. Beginning at wide end, roll each wedge toward point. Place on greased baking sheet, point side down. Cover with damp cloth; let rise 1 hour, till double. Bake at 400° for 10 to 15 minutes. Brush with butter or margarine while warm.

RICE MUSHROOM MEDLEY

To save time, plan to prepare frozen peas while rice mixture cooks—

1 6-ounce package long grain and wild rice mix
1 can condensed beef broth ($1\frac{1}{4}$ cups)
 $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups water
1 small onion, chopped ($\frac{1}{2}$ cup)
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup chopped mushrooms, drained (about $\frac{1}{2}$ cup)

Prepare rice mix according to package directions, substituting the beef broth and $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups water for the liquid called for on package. Meanwhile, cook onion and celery in butter or margarine till tender but not brown. Five minutes before end of cooking time for rice, stir in onion mixture and mushrooms. Continue cooking till all liquid is absorbed. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

PECAN RAISIN PIE

Start with packaged pastry mix for a shortcrust crust that won't fail—

1 cup light corn syrup
3 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
 $\frac{1}{8}$ teaspoon salt
1 cup evaporated milk or light cream
3 beaten eggs
1 cup chopped pecans
1 cup chopped pecans
1 teaspoon vanilla
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup raisins
1 unbaked 9-inch pastry shell

In saucepan, combine syrup, sugar, butter or margarine, and salt. Cook and stir till boiling; cook 1 minute more. Remove from heat. Stir in evaporated milk; cool. Gradually stir cooled syrup mixture into eggs, blending well. Stir in pecans and vanilla. Sprinkle raisins on bottom of pastry shell; pour pecan mixture over raisins. Bake in hot oven (400°) for 35 minutes.

Your appestat* and your waistline

You know about your waistline.

But did you know you have an "appestat"?

That's a kind of hunger-switch in your brain.

Your appestat can help you control your waistline.

Read how sugar regulates your appestat and helps you avoid being fat.

In these days of artificial sweeteners and fad diets, you may have some trouble thinking of ordinary sugar as a key to weight control. But that's exactly what sugar can be to you when you understand how your appestat and sugar work together.

When your blood sugar level is low, your appestat is turned way up, and you're hungry. You're apt to eat more than you need before your blood sugar level can rise again.

So what you do is this: when you're very hungry, take a little sugar—in coffee, a soft drink, ice cream, pastry, candy. Sugar raises your blood sugar level faster than any other food. (Artificial sweeteners have no effect on blood sugar level.) And then your hunger switches off. As a result, you can eat less and feel better when you keep sugar on your diet.

The calories in sugar burn up fast and they give you energy to go on. And sugar tastes good, too. Do you need any more reasons to stay with sugar?

Only 18 calories per teaspoon—and it's all energy.

HOW TO ROAST THAT HOLIDAY TURKEY

To Roast Whole Turkey

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Rinse bird; pat dry. Stuff wish-bone cavity; skewer neck skin to back. Tuck wing tips behind shoulder joints. Rub salt in body cavity and lightly fill with stuffing. Push drumsticks under band of skin at tail, or tie them to tail. Brush turkey with melted fat. If meat thermometer is used, insert in center of inside thigh muscle, making sure bulb does not touch bone. Place turkey, breast side up, on a rack in a shallow roasting pan. Cover with a loose "cap" of foil, pressing it lightly at drumstick and breast. Avoid having foil touch sides of turkey.

When turkey is two-thirds done according to chart, remove cap and baste with pan juices. Heat can reach inside of turkey. Continue roasting till done. Thickest part of drumstick should feel very soft when pressed between finger and thumb. Drumstick should move down and twist easily in joint. Meat thermometer should register 185 degrees.

18 to 20 lbs.	3¼ to 3½
22 to 24 lbs.	3½ to 4

To Foil Roast Turkey

Preheat oven to 450 degrees. Prepare turkey as above. Place turkey, breast up, in covered, greased foil. (If foil isn't large enough to have at least 4 inches extending beyond ends of bird, join 2 pieces with drugstore or lock fold, or use a large sheet to make leakproof joint.) To prevent puncturing, wrap folds of foil around drumsticks and wings. Ends of foil up snugly over breast of turkey; over drugstore fold and press to bird. Then bring sides up against ends of turkey enough to prevent drippings from running into the pan. Place the foil-wrapped bird, breast up, in shallow pan—no rack.

When turkey has cooked within 15 to 20 minutes of time, open foil and fold pan so bird will brown till done.

Insert a loop of wire from the back to hold the flowers together in the basket. Then add more floral cutouts on the sides and corners of the bouquet.

ring of the same fabric. To make the floral ring, cut both large and small flowers from material and alternate until you achieve a garland effect. Machine-stitch in place. Make the centerpiece as you did the others—first cut out duplicate blooms, then glue in place.

Put your paste pot and sewing machine to work, and you can create a variety of conversation-starting table settings like the ones at left. You'll have fun—and your handiwork will be pretty enough for a party. Best of all, you can set a festive table at a moment's notice.

Shop for a selection of brilliantly printed remnants. Then appliqué cutouts of these gaudy fabrics on existing cloths, runners, and mats. (Lavishness of appliqué depends on yardage.) Trim additional units for the centerpieces, paste fabric together, and arrange as shown.

A cook-'n'-serve system.

When you buy Corning's Mini-Kitchen you get a two-piece unit: a specially designed heater base and a specially designed skillet. The skillet fits on the heater base for cooking. But the skillet also separates from the heater base for serving. That way, you have an efficient cook-serv unit that's also a handsome serving piece.

But you don't have to take anybody's word for it. Just take home a Mini-Kitchen for 10 days and be your own judge.

At the very least, it's 10 days away from that hot stove.

- $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon dried minced onions
- 1 tablespoon minced parsley
- 1 egg

The no-pan cake.

is rich and gooey and your friends will love it! (1) Take a Pure-Pak half-gallon carton (the disposable one with the pouring spout), and place it on its side, pouring the milk out up. Cut out the top side to form an open box. (2) Melt chocolate in double boiler. (3) Beat together granulated sugar, egg yolks, milk, egg whites. Add to chocolate, beat until smooth and thick. Then add creamed butter well. Blend in six tablespoons confectioners' sugar, and then add chocolate mixture. (5) Beat egg whites with salt until stiff. Then beat in remaining confectioners' sugar, and fold into chocolate with vanilla. (6) Split ladyfingers.

Place six halves crosswise on bottom of carton, then stand up six halves on each side and three on each end. (7) Spread 1/3 chocolate over bottom layer of ladyfingers. Top with six more ladyfinger halves and another third chocolate. Then six more halves and the remaining chocolate. (8) Chill in refrigerator. Before serving, whip heavy cream, sweetened to taste, spread on top and peak with a spoon. Decorate with maraschino cherries. (9) Then cut away carton at four corners and slide out (won't stick because Pure-Pak cartons are plastic-coated). Serves six and, best of all, you don't have to bring home a pan!

3/4 cup unsalted butter
12 tablespoons sifted confectioners' sugar

If you want a smart, new ceiling but aren't a do-it-yourselfer

Gridline™ Cushiontone® Suspended Ceiling

Wood Grain Ceiling

Pinehurst Cushiontone Tile Ceiling

Have you put off covering up that tired, cracked, or peeling ceiling because you don't want to install a new ceiling yourself? Wait no longer! All you have to do is visit the nearest Armstrong Certified Ceilings Center (see opposite page), and talk to the people there. They're ceiling pros. They'll help you choose your new ceiling and have it installed, too. The only thing you have to do is make up your mind which Armstrong Ceiling you want. (If you change your mind and want to do it yourself, they'll advise you on that, too.)

Gridline Cushiontone Suspended Ceiling (left). These panels rest in a metal frame below your old ceiling. They hang down slightly to create a striking 3-dimensional effect. It's a perfect cover-up for an unsightly ceiling. And Gridline is easy on the ears, too, because it's acoustical.

Wood Grain (center). This ceiling gives you the look of rough random planks; Wood Grain has a deep, grainy texture that's ideal for recreation rooms and dens.

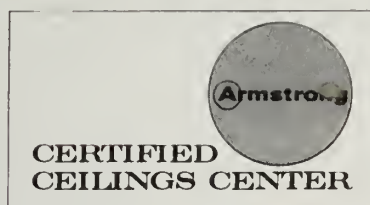

Pinehurst Cushiontone (right). You get a handsome, swirled-plaster effect with Pinehurst. But these tiles won't crack, chip, or peel. This ceiling has been installed with staggered tiles—an imaginative touch that can be lent to any Armstrong tile ceiling.

There are 30 more Armstrong Ceilings where these came from. The people at your Armstrong Certified Ceilings Center will be happy to show you the complete selection. Why not pay them a visit soon.

THIS IS CONVENIENCE!

READY-IN-A-JIFFY SAUCES

Add distinction to your favorite foods this easy way! You're bound for success when you choose the tangy cheese sauce to enhance the wonderful natural flavor of vegetables, or pass the Snappy Horseradish Sauce with hot or cold meat. Then for a grand finale, you can top off a dessert with Chocolate Velvet Sauce.

Photographs: Scott

Snappy Horseradish Sauce

Try this with leftover roast meat for elegant eating—

1 envelope dry cream of leek soup mix
1½ cups water

½ cup milk

2 teaspoons prepared horseradish

Place soup mix in saucepan; gradually stir in water. Add milk. Cook and stir over medium heat till boiling; simmer 5 minutes. Remove from heat. Blend in horseradish. Serve hot. Makes about 2 cups sauce.

Good with: fresh or smoked beef tongue*, meatballs, ground beef patties, roast beef, or corned beef.

*To cook fresh tongue, place in large saucepan, cover with water and add 1 teaspoon salt for each quart water. Cover tightly and cook slowly, allowing about 1 hour per pound. To serve, remove the skin and cut away roots.

For smoked tongue, cook the same way, but omit salt.

Chocolate Velvet Sauce

Make extra to keep on hand for "emergency" desserts—

1 6-ounce package (1 cup) semisweet chocolate pieces

⅔ cup light corn syrup

1 6-ounce can (⅔ cup) evaporated milk

In saucepan, combine chocolate pieces and corn syrup; cook and stir over low heat till chocolate melts. Remove from heat; cool. Stir in evaporated milk. Serve warm or cold. Makes 1⅔ cups sauce. Store in covered container in refrigerator.

Good with: ice cream, cake, pudding.

Dill-Cheese Sauce

Yogurt adds delicious tartness. Will remind you of hollandaise—

1 can condensed cheese soup

½ cup plain yogurt

2 teaspoons dried dill weed

¼ teaspoon aromatic bitters

Combine all ingredients in saucepan. Cook and stir over medium heat till heated through, but not boiling. Makes about 2 cups sauce.

Good with: broccoli, asparagus, cauliflower, baked potatoes.

Why would Betty Crocker make two different buttermilk pancake mixes that give you the same perfect pancakes?

Some women like to crack eggs and pour milk and measure out shortening and stir things around. For these women we make the Regular Mix.

Other women are so rushed, for one reason or another, they want to spend as little time as possible fixing their perfect pancakes. For them we've come up with the Complete Mix. We've added the eggs, the shortening, the milk. Everything is in the box. (Of course, Complete Mix costs a little more because we did most of the work.)

With either Betty Crocker mix you get the same perfect pancakes. You just have to decide what kind of woman you are.

GARDENING THIS MONTH

Norvell Gillespie, Better Homes and Gardens Western Field Editor

Protect roses. Protecting roses from freezing is one of the first considerations of gardeners in those areas where a Western winter means lots of snow and zero weather. The main thing is to start in November with a program of protection. Each plant can be bundled up for the winter by covering the base with plenty of mulching material or by mounding soil 8 to 12 inches deep over the base of the plant.

Some rosarians use wire cylinders (chicken wire or hardware cloth) to hold the mulch in place. Others have taken the lead from Eastern gardeners and are using the new fiber glass cones that fit right over individual plants. Tree roses and climbing kinds require a little different treatment. Tie cornstalks and straw around the plants top to bottom, or cut the roots three-fourths the way around each plant with a sharp spade, lay the plant on its side in the direction of the uncut roots, and cover with soil or mulch.

Protect the crowns and lower canes of your roses by covering them with six to eight inches of soil or loose mulch. Put the cover in place after heavy frosts have cooled the soil. The mulch prevents alternate freezing and thawing during winter and spring months. A tar-paper collar (shown) holds mulch and prevents its being blown away.

Evergreens need care. Broad-leaved evergreens of borderline hardiness, such as rhododendrons, pieris, boxwood, holly, and the like, need cover in cold areas, though most are reasonably tough. They can weather windburn and sun, but to insure their foliage making it through the winter in top condition, cover is recommended. It's probably easiest to stick green boughs in the ground to the windward or sunny side of the plants. Lath frames are excellent for this purpose, too. Burlap, or two or three thicknesses of heavyweight polyethylene are, of course, good to keep sun and wind from reaching the frozen plants.

Where evergreens are lost, the cause is probably failure to keep the soil moist. A mulch is about the best way to reduce loss of soil moisture. The worst damage comes when plants transpire more water through the leaves than can be replaced from frozen soil.

You can coat your evergreens with a thin latex film that prevents the loss of moisture through the needles during the winter months. For a few plants, get an aerosol applicator filled with the latex. If you have many evergreens, get the concentrate, mix with water, and apply with a tank sprayer.

Storage for tender bulbs. To reduce the loss of bulbs due to spoilage in storage during winter months, place the bulbs in shallow redwood bedding-plant flats. An improvement would be a box with a screened lid which allows for ventilation and provides protection from hungry mice.

GARDENING THIS MONTH

After your winter-tender bulbs have dried thoroughly, trim off dead top growth and store in a frost-free but cool area. You should check during winter months to remove dried or damaged bulbs.

This is a convenient way to store dahlias, tuberous begonias, cannas, montbretias, gladiolus, and other kinds.

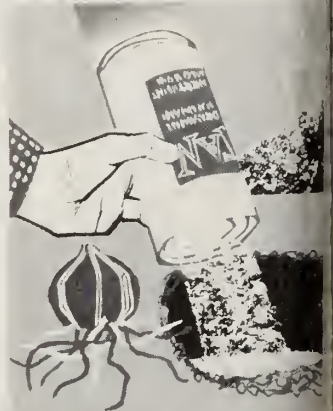

You have a choice when it comes to handling dahlias. Some people prefer to wash off all the soil, allow the tubers to dry, cut into sections, and store in dry sand, peat moss, or vermiculite. Others find it wise to store the entire clump, dirt and all, in an apple box covered with burlap or paper. In the Southwest, where winters are really mild, dahlia tubers can be left right in the ground all winter if the soil drains well. The clumps can be dug next March, just as they are beginning to sprout, and divided to get just one or two sprouts for each new plant.

Don't overlook spring-flowering bulbs. In the West, these bulbs are the workhorses of the garden and yield the color that really makes spring sing. You get double duty out of the same patch of ground by planting combinations of bulbs and annuals as ground covers. A few examples: golden yellow Dutch iris with a ground cover of blue pansies; pure white daffodils with waves of blue forget-me-nots under them; scarlet tulips with white violas; blue scillas with yellow violas.

Other recommended favorites: double St. Brigid anemones (mainly reds and blues) interspersed with white pansies; blue grape-hyacinths as an edging for pink stocks; mixed ranunculus with a panel of nemesis in the foreground; blue Wedgwood Dutch iris interspersed with Iceland poppies in mixed colors; and pink tulips with blue forget-me-nots.

The spring of 1967 marks the resurgence of interest in the old-fashioned botanical Tulip clusiana which is also known as the lady or candy tulip. This wonderful tulip from centuries ago has slender flowers on stems nine to twelve inches tall. The colors are rosy red on the outside with white inside. These botanicals are at home anywhere in the West and are extremely hardy.

Perhaps one of the most rewarding tasks you can accomplish this month is to set out a few top-quality lily bulbs grown in the Northwest. There are marvelous new hybrids in fabulous colors and flower forms that can supply color all the way from May to October. Nurseries carry a wide range of varieties, each accurately labeled and described as to blooming season. Lilies adapt themselves to many kinds of situations: in part shade or sun, in pots, in tubs, or in raised beds. If you haven't grown tulips, try some! The Sentinel strain is especially vigorous. Other easy-to-grow hybrids are: Aurelian, Bellingham, Fiesta, Golden Chalice, Mid-Century, and Olympic.

Choose a sunny, well-drained spot for your lilies. To prevent bulb rot, dust the bulbs and the bottoms of holes with fungicide, such as captan. Cover madonna lilies with four inches of soil—all others need planting depths of four to six inches.

Cleanup time. What is end-of-the-year cleanup and why is it so important? It's essentially a job of grooming the garden: pulling out faded annuals, cutting back perennials, weeding, and raking leaves. But a complete definition should also include pest control and pruning. These are crucial to the welfare of your garden.

There are millions of unsung pests and probably billions

Is the A-frame addition on page 149 too unconventional for your taste? If so, here's a simpler version of the same split level design. The architects hooked this one onto the bedroom end of the same basic Hollin Hills house; then they reshuffled the 1949 floor plan.

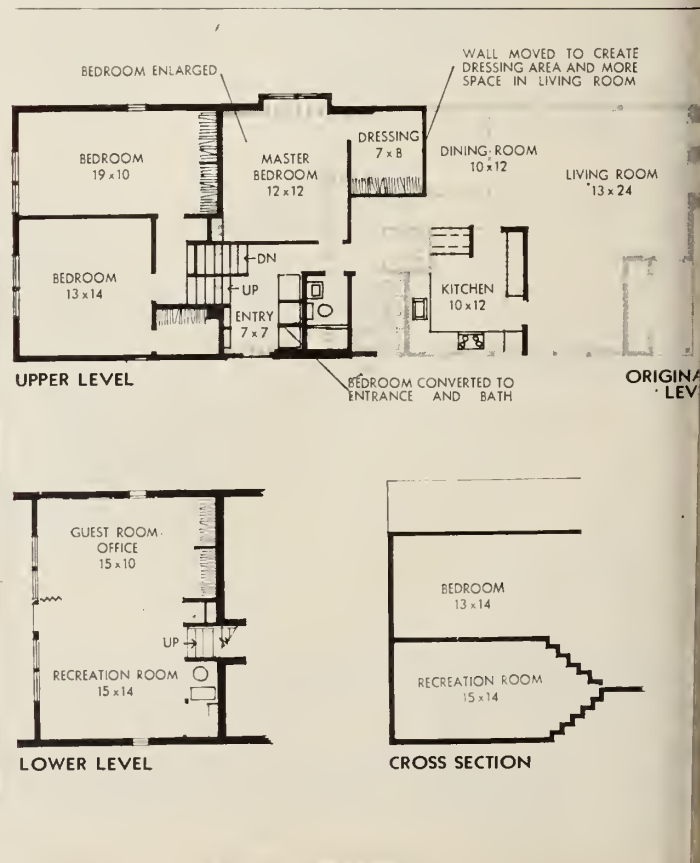

Above: The new wing rises as a two-story extension of the original house. That door where they join opens to a mud room and children's entry (see cutaway drawing below).

Upstairs, two bedrooms look out on a balcony; the lower level is one big room that can be subdivided with a folding partition into a playroom and guest-room/office.

Plans: Most of the changes took place in the bedroom area, as you can see by studying the shaded areas and dotted line. One room accommodates the entry-mud room, a new bath and stairs to the addition; two others were combined for master suite and a larger dining area.

Overall dimensions of the addition are 20x25 feet; its floor space measures about 500 square feet.

Here the house sits sideways on its lot so the owners had room to extend a door-outdoor addition that does several different jobs.

Inside, it expands the entire living area by more than 200 square feet. The new space includes a better entry and a bigger, separate dining room.

Outside, there's a screened porch, a covered entry walk, carport, and an outdoor storage cabinet.

Above left: Mentally subtract the rectangular block starting just right of the chimney, and you'll see one end of that same basic Hollin Hills house you've been showing—complete with its notched-out entry.

Plan: Again, gray lines indicate original house; broken lines show where walls were removed. Now the old entry and dining area are part of a larger living room. The new dining room connects to the living room and porch.

To make it all work, the old entry porch was enclosed and extended another two feet, lining up the front of the addition with the chimney.

Inside, that extra space was used to accommodate a closet and two windows seats along the front wall.

Below: Sliding glass doors tie the dining room and porch together. That brick wall in the background partially hides the new carport.

Good ways to un-humble hamburger

Mrs. Beverly Barrett
Chicago, Illinois

"What I need in my kitchen is help. And next to the hired kind, my favorite help is Franco-American Gravy. It's made with real stuff. (So there's no artificial 'yuk' taste.) Franco-American is a real ally when I don't have enough gravy...or don't want what I have. Also I, who once flunked grapefruit broiling, can cook nice things with it. Which brings us to a few recipes from my Private File. These are sure-fire, easy ways to give hamburger delusions of grandeur. Personally, I value them—and Franco-American Gravy—almost as much as a chance to eat out."

MEATBALLS À LA Russe

Or Stroganoff when you're rushin'.

- 1 pound ground beef
- 2 tablespoons fine, dry bread crumbs
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
- 1 egg, slightly beaten
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- Dash of pepper
- 1 tablespoon shortening
- 1 can Franco-American Beef Gravy
- ¼ cup sour cream

Mix the beef, crumbs, onion, egg, and seasoning. Now round them up into 16 meatballs. Brown in skillet with shortening. Pour off fat; stir in the gravy. Cook over a low heat for 20 minutes, or until done. (Better stir now and again.) Blend in sour cream. Re-heat. Pour over noodles and top with parsley for 4 servings.

HISTORICAL NOTE: A mad czar used to serve it with the noodles on top and the parsley on the bottom. This is not recommended.

SNOWED-UNDER MEAT LOAF

This is a good example of how a smidgen of originality can take you a long way. The big idea here is to move the mashed potatoes from beside to on top.

- 1 can Franco-American Beef Gravy
- 1½ pounds ground beef
- 1 cup small bread cubes
- ½ cup minced onion
- 1 egg, slightly beaten
- 2 tablespoons chopped parsley
- 1 tablespoon Worcestershire
- 1 teaspoon salt; generous dash of pepper
- 2 cups mashed potatoes

Mix thoroughly ¼ cup gravy with all ingredients except the potatoes; shape firmly into loaf and place in shallow baking pan. Bake at 350° for one hour. Then let it snow. Frost the loaf with mashed potatoes and bake for 15 more minutes. Blend the remaining gravy with drippings. Heat and stir occasionally. Serve over the loaf for 4 to 6 servings.

Combine beef with ¼ cup gravy and crumbs; mix thoroughly into 6 hamburger patties. Broil both sides until desired done. Top with cheese during the last minutes; broil until melted. remaining gravy; serve over hamburgers. 6 servings.

A GARAGE BECOMES A MASTER SUITE

Need more room at your house? Finishing an attached garage is a quick, economical way to get it. Here, space that was barely adequate for one car now accommodates a bedroom, fireplace, bath, and compact laundry.

At your house, you could subdivide the same area for two children's rooms, or convert it into a spacious family room. The plan below suggests one of several possible locations for a new, bigger carport.

Top: If your garage doesn't have a room above it, you can go all the way to the ridge beam with a cathedral ceiling. Here, wide shelves eight feet from the floor make a narrow balcony for plants. It has indirect lighting on top, spotlights underneath.

Near right: The garage's rear wall was opened up with a window and door. Outside is a private garden. You could easily reverse this plan and put the window, door and garden in front, where your garage door is now.

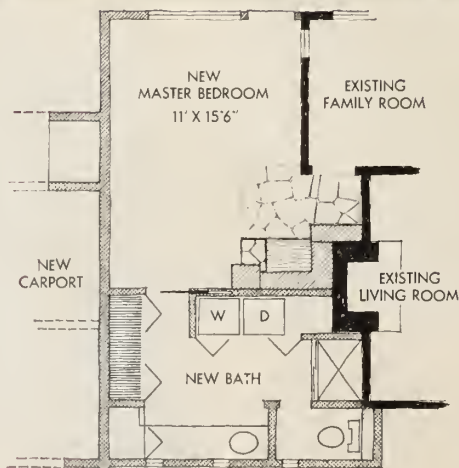

Far right: A new fireplace backs up to an existing chimney. That doorway left of it leads to the family room (see plan). A plywood subfloor in the old garage keeps the house and master suite on the same level.

Plan: The front of the garage was pushed out three feet to accommodate a bath that doubles as a dressing area and triples as a laundry. The appliances hide behind folding doors.

You could build your carport perpendicular to the old garage, as shown here, turn it to face the street, or put it in front, depending on what works best for your lot.

The Wonderful World of CREDIT UNIONS...

makes tomorrow's living possible TODAY!

The third Thursday of October is a very special day for the more than two and one half million Credit Union members in California. On this day each year, special thought is given to the many benefits made available through membership in a Credit Union.

Credit Union members get a good return on their savings and may obtain low interest loans that make possible many important things in life to be enjoyed today! Educational expenses for their children, home improvements, a new automobile, household appliances, medical expenses or any useful purpose!

Credit Unions are non-profit and serve only their members—persons with a common bond of association, such as employment. Government regulated Credit Unions are a friendly place to save, borrow and get financial counseling.

Our slogan for this one hundred eighteenth birthday is appropriate—"People helping people . . . for the dignity of mankind."

FLEXIBLE DECORATING

Photograph: Reynolds. Designer: Humphery and Hardenberg, A.I.D., A.I.A. Source: Barbara

Above: An imposing triple folding screen conceals an window in the end wall of this living room and also off a small refreshment center. Each panel consists of 12 vinyl floor tiles set into a wooden frame. The marble pattern of the tile harmonizes with the simulated shell paper which lines the refreshment area.

Below: These floor-to-ceiling door panels can be closed mealtime, shutting off the kitchen beyond. Or, fold back for easy flow of traffic. Easy to make: hinge plywood panels with double-action hinges, then fasten to door open with two continuous hinges. Paint the panels, alternate the two dominant colors in the dining room.

THERE'S NOTHING LIKE GOOD FRESH HALF & HALF IN YOUR COFFEE.

it's good fresh powdered sodium silico-aluminate, corn syrup solids, vegetable fats, dipotassium phosphate and emulsifiers.)

A jar of powdered coffee creamer can be a handy thing to have around. Sometimes we even wish that we had thought of it first.

But there's no use crying over spilled sodium silico-aluminate. We're selling more of our good, fresh Half & Half than ever. People still seem to think that there isn't anything like the real, fresh thing

And that's a big deal with us. Freshness. Like everything else we make, Foremost Half & Half always comes to you fastidiously fresh. We go to great lengths to be sure of it.

Sometimes we even work right through our coffee breaks.

Fastidiously Fresh

... PLUS POPPY SEED

By Barbara Zache
Associate Foods Editor

Don't forget to add poppy seed! It does so many good things to such a variety of foods. Here it adds nutlike flavor to a terrific torte . . . crunchy texture to a quick cheese loaf . . . polka dot pattern to a fruit salad dressing. And that's just the beginning! You'll find poppy seed adds a plus when used in the following ways, too —

- Toss poppy seed and toasted slivered almonds with buttered noodles.
- Stir into lemon butter for asparagus, cauliflower, green beans.
- Sprinkle poppy seed over dinner rolls just before you bake them.
- Spoon sparingly over cream soup for a flavorful garnish.
- Roll poppy seed into pastry for a meat pie
- Add to creamy French dressing for a tossed green salad.
- Mix a small amount of poppy seed into deviled egg filling.

Classic Poppy Seed Torte

Classic Poppy Seed Torte

Truly a dessert superb—
Cake:

- $\frac{1}{3}$ cup poppy seed
- $\frac{3}{4}$ cup milk
- $\frac{3}{4}$ cup butter or margarine
- $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups sugar
- $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons vanilla
- 2 cups sifted cake flour
- $2\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons baking powder
- $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
- 4 stiff-beaten egg whites

Filling:

- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sugar
- 1 tablespoon cornstarch
- $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups milk
- 4 slightly beaten egg yolks
- 1 teaspoon vanilla

- $\frac{1}{4}$ cup chopped California walnuts

For cake: Soak poppy seed in the $\frac{3}{4}$ cup milk for 1 hour. Cream butter or margarine; gradually add the $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups sugar, creaming well. Stir in the $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons vanilla and milk and poppy seed. Sift together flour, baking powder, and salt; stir into creamed mixture. Fold in beaten egg whites. Pour batter into 2 well-greased and lightly floured 8x1 $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch round cake pans. Bake in moderate oven (375°) 20 to 25 minutes. Let cool in pans 10 minutes. Then remove from pans to racks.

For filling: Mix the $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sugar with the cornstarch. Combine the $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups milk and the egg yolks; gradually stir in sugar mixture. Cook and stir till mixture thickens and boils, about 1 minute. Cool slightly; add the 1 teaspoon vanilla and the walnuts. Cool.

Poppy-Lime Salad Dressing

Split each cake layer into 2 layers. Assemble torte, spreading filling between layers. Sift confectioners' sugar over top. (If desired, cut snowflake pattern from paper; sift sugar through pattern onto cake.) Chill 2 to 3 hours before serving.

Poppy-Lime Salad Dressing

Complements fruit salad—
 $\frac{1}{3}$ cup vinegar

- $\frac{1}{4}$ cup lime juice
- $\frac{3}{4}$ cup sugar
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon poppy seed
- 1 teaspoon dry mustard
- 1 teaspoon paprika
- 1 cup salad oil
- $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon onion juice

Combine vinegar and lime juice; heat to boiling. Combine sugar, salt, poppy seed, mustard, and paprika; add to hot liquid, stirring to dissolve. Add oil and onion juice. Beat with rotary beater till thoroughly blended and slightly thickened. Cover; refrigerate. Serve over fresh or canned fruit salad. Makes about $1\frac{3}{4}$ cups dressing.

Poppy-dot Cheese Loaf

Poppy-dot Cheese Loaf

Sharp cheddar lends unique flavor to this quick-to-fix loaf—

- $3\frac{3}{4}$ cups packaged biscuit mix
- $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups shredded sharp process American cheese
- 1 tablespoon poppy seed
- 1 beaten egg
- $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups milk

Combine biscuit mix, cheese, and poppy seed; add egg and milk. Mix just to blend; then beat vigorously for 1 minute. Transfer dough to well-greased 9x5x3-inch loaf pan. Sprinkle with additional poppy seed. Bake in moderate oven (350°) 50 to 60 minutes. Remove from pan; cool on rack.

For bed and bath

'Now-Group.' A whole new concept of what-goes-with-what. It's a rowdy collection of cloth-pattern parts. All designed to mix and choose however they strike you.

Like gingham sheets with a flowered or multicolored stripe spread (shown hanging). Like towels that come in stripes, checks or border prints.

The colors are fire-hot (as shown), brossy golds or brozen blue-greens. In the bed and bath shop at the stores you love most.

This is a peninsula designed to change your expansive kitchen from an open energy waste to a convenient snack-and-visit center of your home. The cooking bar extends from a wall of handsome cabinets (included in plans) to save many steps, or omit the burners and have an open counter for serving. Or you can build cabinets without counter. Complete working drawings, 3303-2, priced at just $2.

You'll never again have to shoo children and homework away from the table at mealtime—if you provide a comfortable spot in the kitchen for study. Here are three study areas you can't beat for versatility. They'll double for quick meals, party preparation, telephoning, craftwork. Be sure the sit-down space is table-height, a comfortable 28 to 30 inches off the floor for use with standard chairs.

Above: Plenty of space here. Long, uncluttered counter is just right for buffet and party serving as well as for spreading out children's books and papers. Overhead, the cabinets store extra dishes, foods, and staples; sliding door units below hold roasters, extra cookware, serving trays. There's room left over for typewriter, office supplies, and business records. Desk work is easy on the eyes, too, with four, 20-watt fluorescent tubes.

Designer: W. J. Davy. Decorator: Robert Stevenson AID. Source: Roger Brac

Center: This handy counter separates kitchen area from family room activities. It's ideal for after-school studying and party serving. Pull-out leaves double the spread-out space for eating, sewing or artwork—on both sides of the counter. Overhead drop-lights help prevent eye strain. Located next to the cook-top, the counter is a good place for last-minute meal preparation and small-appliance cooking as well as for eating.

Below: Here, an easy-to-work-at desk rounds the corner between refrigerator and food pantry. Comfortable desk chair doubles for table use. Telephone and reference books are conveniently near the table, too. Shelf below counter is deep enough for atlas, telephone directory, notebooks. Drawer on the right holds stationery; storage below could be adapted for a typewriter on a pop-up shelf.

NOTION COUNTER

HOMEMAKERS' SPECIALS!

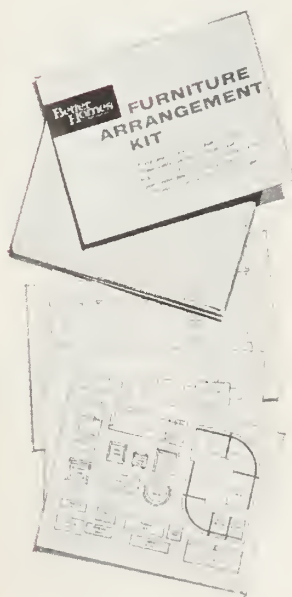

A notion counter's a fascinating spot, and if you linger long around it, you're sure to see several more things you need just as much as the one you came by for. We don't have a lot for display on our counter, but we've got three items we feel sure you're going to want. Look at them, read about them, and then send us your quarter, fifty-cent piece, or check for the ones you want.

25¢ If you're following sewing instructions and come across one or two, or possibly even more words about which you aren't sure, it's going to be difficult for you to get through the whole pattern idea to a nicely finished piece. The more you know, the better you'll sew! Here is a folder of clear definitions of sewing terms that will be fascinating to you, and incidentally, of course, with the full descriptions and information included, amounts to a class in needlework. Pick up your Simple Glossary of Sewing, 25c.

25¢ Pocket size, or of the size just right to fit into your hand, you can carry this chart with you and refer to it on any occasion when you wish to check food possibilities. Individual food items are readily found in this classified listing, so that you can easily gauge your calorie limit or watch the totals to keep within the 1500-a-day boundaries suggested for weight control. Or tell how much more you can safely take! The single chart is priced at 25c, but if you have a family on the diet control path, they're five for $1. Basic Calorie Chart, 25c.

50¢ This can be fun, or perhaps one of the most worthwhile items concerned with the rearrangement of your rooms, or that move to your new house! It's a kit providing scale drawings of all kinds of furniture pieces, so you can look among them and find a representation of each piece you have, or plan to have, in any one room. With these drawings, you'll find graph paper scaled to the furniture representations, so that on it you can draw the outline of the walls of your room, mark the widths of doors and windows, hearths, projections and recesses, and then proceed to place the furniture in the best possible arrangement. You can move pieces about until the best relationship is found, and then without having previously "tried" an actual piece of furniture, move each sofa, chair, table, lamp, and footstool right into the spot where it belongs! For amusement, or for keeps, you'll want the Furniture Arrangement Kit, 50c.

The Skinny Blanket may last longer than the bed you put it on.

You should be able to get 10 or 15 good years out of a mattress and innerspring, assuming you're a quiet sleeper.

On the other hand, no matter how much you toss and turn, your Skinny Blanket should still be going strong then.

If you find that hard to believe, let us give you a few Skinny Blanket facts to sleep on.

First, the Skinny Blanket is completely different from any ordinary blanket you've ever owned. Because it's made a completely different way. The Fiberwoven® process. It makes a blanket that is just as warm and snug as any ordinary blanket. But it does away with the fat, the fluff, and the problems of ordinary blankets.

For instance, the Skinny Blanket only shrinks slightly, even after 50 washings (yes, we said washings). Because we take all the other shrinkage out of it long before it gets to you.

And you don't have to watch the Skinny Blanket go to pieces in little balls of fluff under your bed, because there isn't any fluff. It won't shed and pill all over the place. A little, maybe, after it's been around for awhile. But not enough to sneeze at.

So the Skinny Blanket will keep its original good looks even after years of wear. (It's earned the Good Housekeeping Seal.)

Sound pretty tough? It's also pretty pretty.

It comes in 100% Dacron® polyester from $12.98* and other fiber blends from $8.98*. In seven lively solid colors. And in vivid hand-screened prints, like the one in the picture.

That's our Federal Heritage from the new Heritage Collection of early American designs. There are also Western, New England, and Southern Heritage blankets. Each has a distinctive print drawn from America's romantic past.

With no fluff to cloud the color or the pattern, each print is as clear and crisp as a coverlet. And since you'll probably want to use it as one, we've added a delicate fringe all around it.

Of course, if you're really concerned about the bed wearing out first, don't worry. Maybe someone will invent a Skinny Mattress by then.

Skinny Blanket.

SEVEN SUBDIVISION HOUSES

At first glance, the Hollin Hills house at the right looks like the basic house on page 82. But this one is slightly larger—about 1,250 square feet—and it has a different floor plan.

Plan: Compare the shaded lines with those on preceding pages, and you'll see the differences.

Here the entry is in the center, with an L-shaped dining-living-study area on one side, a kitchen and bath on the other, and three bedrooms along the rear.

When Hollin Hills was developed, imaginative site planning made many identical houses look different. Homes were turned this way and that on their lots for maximum privacy and sunlight.

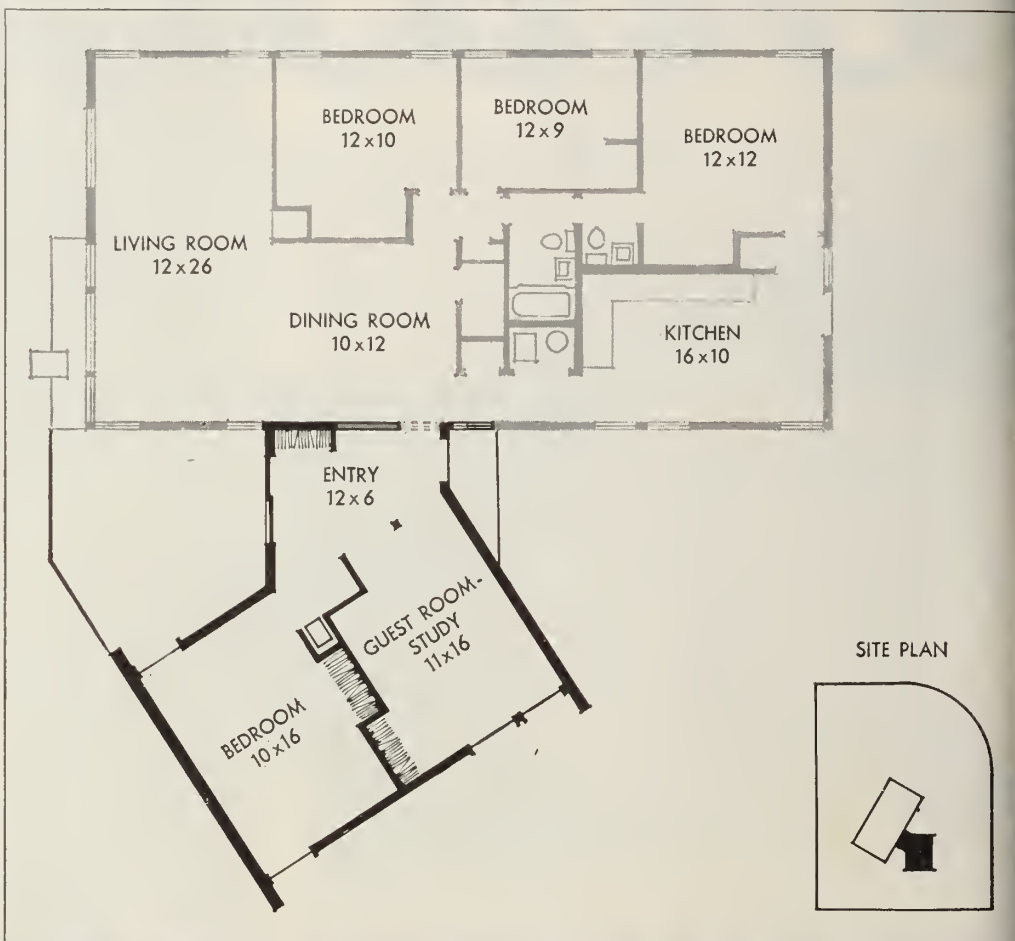

This wing (bedroom, study, and entry) shows how unusual siting can also point the way toward a distinctive addition. The house is angled on a curved lot, with one corner almost touching the building setback line.

The addition could have been tacked onto the front or side of the house; instead it was built parallel to the setback line, making a private patio between the bedroom and house.

Now the living room still has two walls with windows, and the bedroom is isolated from noise-making areas of the house.

Right: The triangular entry fits between the brick addition and the original house.

Even Teflon® needs a good scrub now and then.

Tuffy.

Oh, yes it does. Food leaves a film of grease on Teflon. You can't see it, but it's there. Building up. Making the non-stick stick. Don't think soapy water alone will get it off. You've got to add Tuffy® to it. Really. That nice little red-and-yellow plastic mesh ball won't scratch, either. Not Teflon. Or delicate china. Or you-name-it. Maybe you ought to have two.

The Painkiller. For hemorrhoids that hurt.

You have probably heard of Nupercainal® Suppositories and Ointment by now. Nupercainal is the most effective and longest lasting painkiller of the leading products available without prescription. It is over eight times stronger than the most commonly used topical anesthetic preparation. Doctors have been recommending Nupercainal for over 33 years for hemorrhoids that hurt.

Over 8 times more pain-killing power than the most commonly used topical anesthetic.

SEVEN SUBDIVISION HOUSES

Continued

Here's another angular addition, but this one had to be built that way to conform to the building setback line. Inside are new entry and a compact family room.

Top: The trellis beside the entry juts out at an angle, too, making the approach to the door seem more open, and screening a new window beside it.

Above: The front of the addition has only one tall, narrow window, but sliding glass doors open up this end to a secluded patio. Another trellis helps screen it all.

Plan: To connect the addition, the architects filled in the old front door with one of the living room windows, and moved the entry a few feet to the right. Two other windows were replaced with big bifold doors that open the family room to the living area; an accordion door closes off the family room from the new entry.

Eason Cross, one of the architects who designed all the additions we've been showing, is himself a resident of Hollin Hills. He needed more space but didn't want to crowd his lot—so he went up, with a three-story "tower" on the front of the same one-level house.

Above: Inside, from bottom to top, are a dining room, playroom, and living room. Windows on each level face in different directions for maximum privacy.

Plan: Cross attached his addition to the front of the old living room, beside the entry. Open stairways lead to the second floor playroom and lofty new living room; seven-foot-high ceilings minimize climbing.

Heavy lines in the existing house indicate how the L shaped dining-living-study area was divided into a big family room and a fourth bedroom.

This may be one of the reasons you buy carpet this year.

If you want a carpet that feels soft and bouncy, you need more than a carpet.

You need B.F. Goodrich carpet cushion underneath.

It makes the carpet feel deep, soft and bouncy. It protects the carpet from wear, from getting bald.

We make this cushion out of spongy rubber.

That's why it's soft, but not squishy.

That's why it never flattens or loses its bounce.

That's why it never mildews or

rots once it's under the carpet, never gets fleas from the family dog or cat, never makes you sneeze if you're allergic.

B.F. Goodrich guarantees your carpet cushion against defects in workmanship and material or we will replace it without charge. Not just for the life of the carpet, but without time limit.

So, to avoid disappointment when you want to buy a deep, soft, bouncy carpet, remember what makes a carpet that way.

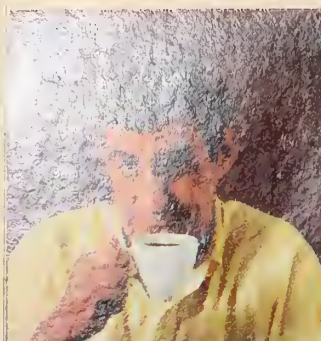

And insist on B.F. Goodrich sponge rubber carpet cushion.

If we made it any better, you wouldn't need carpet.

Your husband says, "How come you can't make a great cup of coffee like my sister?"

Maybe you need a Corning Ware coffee maker like the one you gave her last year.

This year, give your husband great coffee. Give yourself a Corning Ware coffee maker.

We make it easy for you to make a great cup of coffee.

A Corning Ware coffee maker is easy to clean because it's made from Corning's unique Pyroceram® brand material. Coffee oils don't cling to it. So when you make today's coffee you don't wind up serving a little of yesterday's coffee.

You can have a Corning Ware percolator in the size you want: 4, 6, or 9-cup. Prices start at just $8.95 in either All-White or with the familiar Cornflower emblem.

No matter which one you select, make this the year you give yourself a Corning Ware coffee maker. Your husband deserves it.

CARS IN YOUR FAMILY Begins on page 28

From here we get into the problem of the "older" car—say model year 1962 or earlier. Whether you drive it as your only car or as a second car, you probably don't want to spend any more money on maintenance than is absolutely necessary. Why spend $20 to $40 tuning up an old car that may well have too much valve and cylinder wear to ever give red-hot performance?

Instead, you could try "selective" tune-ups. That is, just have specific jobs done. Replace plugs and points every two years, clean the air filter once a year (these cars don't have a crankcase vent valve to maintain), check the battery fall before cold weather and get other minor adjustments or replacements as may be needed.

How can you get a good tune-up?

There is no simple answer to this. Many mechanics are on a "flat rate" basis, and are paid an extra percentage for parts installed. This condition may result in a tune-up job with some unnecessary parts thrown in. If you know of a dependable garage service station in your area, ask some of your friends about their experiences with tune-up. A satisfied customer is the best recommendation for any service station or garage.

Without a recommendation, you'll probably just have to trust to luck. But your car is better off if you can take it to stay with the car while it's being worked on. You'll get an idea of what kind of work the garage mechanics do. Your show of interest may pay off on the one doing the tune-up. Also don't fall for the $9.95 "major" tune-up, which includes labor and parts costs as high as they are today, that a tune-up can't include the critical wear parts of the engine. In many cases, it's only to get your car in the shop. Then if a true tune-up is performed, you'll pay a price closer to those we've shown.

How important is a tune-up for easy starting?

One out of every four motorists experiences starting trouble during an average winter. In a recently completed comparative five-year study, it was found that tune-ups do make a difference. The rate of starting failure is consistently lower for car owners in the Canadian province of Quebec than for those in any other region of the United States or Canada. In fact, the incidence is nearly 50 percent lower than that of the much milder Pacific Coast of the U.S. And significant evidence shows that the motorists of Quebec have the highest incidence of tune-up purchases.

In the United States, the incidence of starting trouble is higher in the more temperate South and Far West than in the higher than average northern states. Starting failure. Tune-up purchases there are lower than the national average.

This study clearly shows the importance of proper tune in any climate or weather condition. Moral: The motorist doesn't just limit himself to special pre-winter vacation tune-ups. Instead, he follows a tune-up timetable based on total mileage, not his car in top operating condition all year around.

WHICH TIRE REPAIR METHOD TO SPECIFY

Moneywise, there really is much difference in the cost of a tubeless tire repair. But there is a big difference in the quality of the repair, how it is how long you can expect it

There are three basic methods in general use today: the chemical patch, and vulcanization. Each has its own advantages (and limitations), and each has its proper application depending upon circumstances. For your driving safety and to assure maximum life of the tire, you should have an understanding of all three.

The plug is the least expensive method. It is the most popular because it is quick and can be performed without removing the tire from the wheel. With this type of repair, the puncturing object is removed from the tire and a rubber plug is injected or forced into the hole.

While the plug repair is a temporary one, it should be considered only as a temporary emergency repair to get you on the road for a relative short trip at reduced speed. It should be replaced by a "permanent" repair as soon as possible. A plug seals up the air hole—that's about all. It does nothing to seal or reinforce the cords that were ruptured by the puncturing object. At high speeds, continuous flexing of the tire can cause a plug to "pop out" of a worn tire.

Another disadvantage to consider with this type of repair is that because it isn't necessary to move the tire from the wheel, there is no chance for the owner to inspect the tire for damage or breaks that may have occurred before, or after, the repair. This is important because what may appear to be a "straight-through" nail hole may actually be a two-inch tear on the inside of the tire.

The chemical patch (cold patch) represents the next step in tire repair. This type repair is performed on the inside of the tire and does require removing the tire from the wheel. A patch is applied around the puncture hole and a self-vulcanizing rubber patch is applied. Then a specially formulated rubber patch is applied to place and the repair is sealed. (Be sure a nylon-reinforced patch is used.)

This method provides an opportunity for inspecting the tire from the wheel and offers some protection of the damaged area. It does not seal the hole or the cords or the hole to prevent further cord deterioration from oil and moisture entering the puncture.

The Rubber Manufacturers Association recommends that either the plug type repair or the cold patch you do not exceed more than 100 miles and your speed not exceed 50 mph. The same recommendations apply to aerosol-type tire repairs.

Vulcanization (sometimes referred to as a "hot patch"), is a bit more expensive but it's the only "permanent" repair that can seal punctures up to 1/4-inch in diameter may be safely repaired by this method.

Here, again, the tire must be removed from the wheel which means the tire can be thoroughly inspected for inside damage. The area to be repaired is buffed and cleaned, and a nylon-reinforced patch is applied. Then a gas or electrical heating element is clamped into place. The applied heat plus pressure forces the patch rubber to flow into the puncture hole, completely sealing it. The repair also seals ruptured cords and broken pieces of rubber, making the area as strong as it was before and providing total protection from oil, moisture, and deterioration.

If a tire loses all or most of its air pressure, particularly when you're driving at high speeds, it must be removed from the wheel for complete internal inspection. Surveys show that in two out of three cases, running a flat tire even a short distance causes irreparable damage.

Any favorite snapshot will make a Christmas card that is yours alone.

It could be a snapshot you took over the Fourth. Or one of the whole family on vacation. Or just the baby alone. The important thing is that it'll make an unusual—and unusually appealing—Christmas card.

Another thing. Photo-Greeting Cards don't cost any more than many ordinary cards. And ordering them is a snap. You just take the negative of your favorite shot or the color print itself or the slide to your dealer and choose the card style you like best from his selection. That's all there is to it.

But don't wait until it's too late. Or you may have to settle for an ordinary card.

The best part of going to Europe is the sheer excitement of it all, which starts even as you make your plans and surges to a fever pitch when your jet soars across the foreign coastline, your shortest night behind you, the brilliant morning sky ahead.

But that's only the beginning. Now comes the whole new experience of discovering the Old World for yourself—that strange and yet familiar jumble of countries where luxury hotels tower over ancient shrines, modern traffic threads its honking way through Medieval city gates, and those mini-mini-skirted girls flounce past palaces whose ornate chambers are veritable treasure troves of art; this venerable Europe, with its quaint villages, magnificent scenery and robber baron castles, a continent revitalized and swinging, bikini playground and sightseer's paradise, the shopper's delight, your waistline's undoing.

It's a fun trip all the way—but with a serious payoff. You'll come back a citizen of the world, and thus a more effective citizen at home. Not because you've seen the Coliseum in the moonlight, taken movies from a ship cruising down the Rhine, or window-shopped along the incomparably elegant Champs Elysees in Paris, but because you'll have touched the lives of people who are now no longer strangers—in fact, they'll have made you feel very much at home in their countries.

FAMILY TRAVEL

WHAT'S YOUR BEST WAY TO SEE EUROPE?

By George Bush, Eastern Editor

With new low air fares, European adventures are now well within reach of Better Homes and Gardens families. For example, you can round-trip to London from New York for as little as $230, to Amsterdam and Paris for $250, to Rome for $330. (From Chicago, the same tickets cost $305, $325, and $405.) Comfortable rooms at reasonable prices are available almost everywhere, and food is often considerably less expensive than restaurant fare in the city where you live.

Travel bargains abound. If you want to explore Europe by car, you can fly from New York to Amsterdam, have the use of a car for three weeks, then fly back, all for $320. This special KLM package includes 1,000 free kilometers (621 miles), which in Europe covers a lot of territory! Or you can take a two-week Alitalia guided tour of Italy for just $529, including round trip, hotels, sight-seeing, tips, taxes, almost all meals. For these and other European trips that offer you the most for your travel dollar, turn to page 170.

HOW TO PICK YOUR OWN BEST WAY TO SEE EUROPE

Always try to travel when most other people stay home. This applies especially to Europe where summer is a tourist free-for-all, with jammed hotels and highways, higher prices, and less chance to get the fine personalized service you'd normally expect.

Spring is best: it's fresh and fragrant, unlike any spring you've ever known. Fall comes a close second. The Mediterranean region warms up in March, stays cozy often through November. Scandinavia and the British Isles often get more sunshine in May than they do in summer.

Escorted tours are easiest: book one through your travel agent, and everything is taken care of for you—tickets, hotels, most meals, sight-seeing, and even such bothersome details as baggage transfers and tips. You can figure that an average three-week tour, including fare from New York, will come to about $700 to $1,000 per person.

Of course, where you go and what you do is dictated by the tour schedule; you can't stay someplace for an extra couple of days when you're really enjoying yourself, or take off on some extensive explorations of your own.

Independent travel allows you complete freedom, but if you don't watch yourself it can run into money. Not only are the fares higher—for example $300 for a regular 21-day air excursion ticket to London, as against $230 with a group—but all the block-booking discount advantages of group travel are missing too.

However, there are ways to get some of the price breaks of group travel and still stay independent. One is to decide on your major stops in advance and to buy "package plans" from your travel agent. A typical city package may run about $30 for four days and three nights, including room, breakfast, often some sight-seeing, and sometimes even lunch and/or dinner.

Furthermore, by buying a minimum of $70 worth of package bookings or other ground arrangements in advance, you're entitled to a "tour-based" ticket which runs $30 less than the regular 21-day fare. This combination easily trims $100 or more from the normal costs of independent travel.

But better yet is to take advantage of today's greatest travel bargain: the "group inclusive tour fare," which also includes $70 of prepaid ground arrangements in a total ticket cost that's never more than the regular excursion fare. Under this clever arrangement, which is based on a group of at least 15 persons traveling to and from Europe together, it is often possible to be completely on your own at the group's destination, and even to go off traveling wherever you like.

Tie it in with a few package plans and your trip may well cost you much less than an escorted tour.

The "Grand Tour" is often the first-timer's best bet: it allows you to survey all of Western Europe in one trip, planned specifically to include the major historical, scenic, and cultural landmarks.

Typically, such a 21-day escorted tour (22 days including the day of your flight from the States) proceeds by modern air-conditioned sight-seeing bus, with perhaps occasional stretches by rail and ship, and—always in the company of your knowledgeable, English-speaking guide—takes your group to London, Amsterdam, Frankfurt, Munich, Salzburg, Venice, Florence, Rome, Monaco, Nice, Lucerne, and Paris, plus other points of interest along the route. Such a tour can cost anywhere from $600 or $700 on up, including air fare, depending on the degree of luxury and the time of year. Longer tours, usually from 33 to 42 days and including ship travel to and from Europe, start at $1000 or more.

The only drawback of this type of tour (provided of course that you enjoy group travel) is that you're almost always on the move, and on a fairly tight schedule at that. To avoid booking a tour that's in too much of a rush, make your selection from among those that offer the most "free time" along the way.

The Big Cities. Jetting from one major city to the next is something like a grand tour, but with the important difference that you can easily do it independently, concentrate on your special interests, and still save money by buying package plans in connection with a tour-based ticket.

If you're making independent arrangements, it's very important that you plan your trip carefully. Every airport city in Europe has its maximum mileage allowance from your point of transatlantic departure, and you must plot your itinerary so that all the stopover cities you want to see fall within the allowance for the destination on which your fare will be based.

You have plenty of flexibility, however. Just to give you an interesting example: a tour-based ticket to Rome costs $379. With this ticket you could stop off in any or all of these cities: Dublin, London, Amsterdam, Paris, Frankfurt, Zurich, and Milan on your way to Rome, and in Nice, Barcelona, and Madrid on your way back to New York. You could even visit Dubrovnik in Yugoslavia and Tunis in North Africa, all on the same fare.

Any number of stopover combinations are possible. Your travel agent or airline can help you work them out. And if you're not interested in city package plans, your agent can also help you find hotels in your price range. As a last resort, if you should suddenly decide en route to stop off in a city where you do not have prior reservations, go to the desk maintained at every major airport by the local tourist office; chances are they'll find what you want.

Organized tours are also available for city hopping, including TWA's new city program which gives you the price benefit of group travel but allows you to be completely on your own in all cities visited. You will find it described in detail on page 170.

Europe by Car. This is the best way if you want to go exploring. And the high cost of gasoline in Europe is offset by the money you can save by making overnight stops in country inns or on the outskirts of the big cities. There is a tremendous difference (much more so than in the United States) between prices in population centers and away from them—this goes for accommodations, meals, and everything else!

Driving is no problem; just get used to the fact that Europeans drive, by and large, faster than we do. Despite the higher speeds, however, you cannot figure on covering the same distance in the time you do at home, because the roads are curvier and there are many more small towns along the way to slow you down.

You can rent cars in every major city and in most minor ones from agencies franchised by Numbers 1 and 2 in the American automobile rental business, or from Maggiore,

Inc. (535 Fifth Ave., New York City 10017), Europe's biggest car rental network. Cars can be rented in one city and dropped in another. Daily rates run about $6 to $9 a day for comfortable four-door European models; stick shifts are standard except in higher-priced cars.

Car rentals may be included in prepaid arrangements on tour based fares; make the arrangements with your travel agent, who will also supply you with a booklet on driving regulations and road signs and help you get an international driver's license through the AAA (750 Third Ave., New York City 10017), which is a good safety back-up in case of trouble, although in most countries your own driver's license is honored.

Europe by Rail. Next to driving, this is the best way to see the continent in detail. And it's generally considerably cheaper if you carry no more luggage than you can handle easily yourself so that you don't have to get a porter or hail a cab every time you get off the train.

European trains generally are excellent—fast, comfortable, even luxurious. Train lines are famous travel adventures in their own right—the run of the Rheingold Express, for instance, and the routes of the Swiss Railways through the highest Alps are trips worth taking even if otherwise you hop around by plane.

A single ticket, called a "Eurailpass," which must be obtained in advance from your travel agent, is all you need for unlimited rail travel in Western Europe. As of January it will cost $110 for 21 days; $130 for one month; $180 for two months; $210 for three months (for the remainder of the current year prices are slightly lower). Eurailpass puts you in first class, with unlimited stopover privileges, and also allows you to ride free or at substantial discounts on many bus routes, river boats, and ferries.

Your best way to use a Eurailpass is to buy it in connection with a tour-basing fare or if possible with a group-inclusive fare arrangement. Make your Transatlantic destination the closest convenient point on the continent in order to get the lowest air fare. For instance, the tour-based fare to Lisbon is $270. Add $110 for the Eurailpass, and you've spent $380. This is just about the same as an air round trip to Rome, with the only difference that the Eurailpass will get you there on the ground—more slowly, but you'll be seeing the country all the way.

Again, buy city packages at some of the major rail stops you know you'll make.

For Britain, you can get a 15-day "BritRail" pass for $50 (one-month, $75) for unlimited first class travel in England, Scotland, and Wales. British Rail International, 630 fifth Ave., New York City 0020 has a number of excellent tours that package accommodations with rail travel. These tours can be pre-booked through your travel agent as part fulfillment of the requirement for your tour-based fare.

Countries You Want To See Most. Now that going abroad is no longer a once-in-a-lifetime dream, more and more Americans are enjoying leisurely visits to countries they want to see most, rather than covering everything in one trip.

Eastern Europe. You may not feel comfortable with the thought of traveling in the Communist world, but it's an undeniable fact that behind the Iron Curtain are some of the world's most interesting and beautiful cities, like Prague, and some great scenery—the Dalmatian Coast of Yugoslavia, for example. Yet more important is that we should—and can—get to know the people whose governments are at odds with our way of life. You will find these people warm and friendly; most are indeed very eager to meet Americans and to learn more about us than they read in their censored newspapers.

Visas are generally easy to get. Check with your travel agent on the procedure. Accommodations are acceptable, though as a rule not splendid. Prices are low, and you'll be perfectly safe unless you're making like 007.

A Real Vacation. Instead of traveling around, go to some fun place in Europe, the way you'd go to a dude ranch or a beach resort right here at home. This gives you a chance to take it easy and absorb the foreign atmosphere at your leisure. Granted, you won't see many different places—but you'll get to know people from many different countries, because, if you pick the right spot, they'll be living or vacationing there.

And even if you don't care to sit three weeks in one place, you might well consider splitting your European trip into two parts: first, a two-week tour, and then a week's relaxation where the pace is slow.

Any one of the major cities fills this bill. Tourist services in all major cities have extensive excursion programs; indeed, most European countries are small enough so that you can pretty well cover them by radiating out from their capitals. (See Better Homes and Gardens, April, 1965, for recommended side trips from London, Paris, Amsterdam, Copenhagen, Zurich, Geneva, Rome, Munich, Frankfurt, Barcelona, Madrid.)

Now here, apart from the big cities, are great vacation places that lend themselves to the combination of relaxing, sight-seeing, and getting the feel of the country.

Lugano, a charming small city on the shore of a lovely lake surrounded by the Alps of the Swiss-Italian border; long a favorite of European vacationers. Spring comes very early here; by the end of March you can take day-long boat excursions on the Italian lakes, funiculars to panorama mountaintops, organized tours to Venice and the Dolomites. Also: easy side trips by rail or rented car to nearby Milan, across the Alps to Zurich and Lucerne, even to Genoa and the Italian Riviera. Rooms for two with bath and breakfast range from about $10 to $30; with all meals, from about $13 to $50. The Hotel DuLac-Seehof is excellent at about $28 a day for two, with bath and all meals. (Transatlantic airport: Milan.)

Lausanne, university and resort center in the vineyards on the north shore of Lake Geneva. Delightful countryside. Organized excursions to Mont Blanc, Zermatt with its Matterhorn, and other Alpine centers. Close to Geneva, five hours by Trans-Europe express (dinner at your seat) to Paris. Day trips by rented car to eastern France and northern Italy. Special well-priced city packages available that include various excursions. Off-season rates run about $15, including breakfast, for two at Eden Hotel; in luxury class, select Palace Hotel, about $25. (International airport: Geneva.)

Salzburg, Mozart's home town, beautiful provincial city in the Austrian Alps, bustling but gemutlich, quaint narrow streets, excellent shopping. Excursions to crystal-clear mountain lakes, across German border to nearby Berchtesgaden. Easy side trips by rented car or train to Munich, Vienna, northern Italy. Famous international music festival in summer; many concerts throughout year. Stay at charming, comfortable country inn, Hotel Steinlochner, about $10 for double room, $20 including delicious meals, or at elegant Fondachhof, about $17 per night for two. (Airport: Munich.)

French Riviera, Europe's great playground of the Cote d'Azur, a stunning mixture of elegant villas, sophisticated hotels, luxury yachts, gambling casinos, big money, church bells pealing through serene villages that nestle against hillsides overlooking the blue Mediterranean, snow-capped peaks in backgrounds. Stay in Nice, Cannes (film festival in May), Antibes, or Juan les Pins.

Short trips by car, bus, train to Monaco, Marseilles, Avignon, into French Alps, across nearby border to Italy. Double rooms range from about $12 to $30, including bath and often breakfast. Nice's Negresco is tops in Old-World elegance. Beau Rivage, especially recommended for its location, runs about $13 off-season for a double; the Splendide, a new American-style hotel with swimming pool on roof, $20. In Cannes, Hotel Fouquet, about $17. From late spring, stay at excellent Hotel Juana, Juan-les-Pins, about $25 including bath, great meals, private beach. (Airport: Nice.)

Wiesbaden, one of Germany's famous spas, enjoys mild climate April to October. Hot springs, beautiful parks and promenades, cozy restaurants. Excellent excursion center: river cruises on most famous section of Rhine, past vineyards, castles and Lorelei Rock, to Koblenz and Cologne (back by train the same night); scenic one-day trip by car or Europabus along Germany's "Romantic Highway" via Medieval Rothenburg and Dinkelsbuehl to Munich; other side trips to Heidelberg, Frankfurt, picturesque Assmannshausen in wine country, Frankfurt, Black Forest, Strasbourg in northern France, and to Basel, Switzerland. International music festival in May. Good double rooms about $8 to $20. Recommended: Hotel Blum and Hotel Rose, about $12 with bath and breakfast. (Airport: Frankfurt.)

For a few days' rest prior to your trip home after touring, you might also consider a number of warm, sunny places which, though less conveniently located for far-flung excursions, provide wonderful vacationing and are convenient to airports where you can get direct flights back to the United States:

Torremolinos, lively bikini beach resort on Spain's semi-tropical Costa del Sol near Gibraltar. Airport at Malaga, connects to Madrid for departures for the U. S.

Alicante, medieval city-turned-beach resort on Costa Blanca in southeast Spain. Famous Easter week pageant and festivities, including grandiose re-enactment of defense of city walls during Moorish War. The local airport connects to either Madrid or Barcelona.

Italian Riviera: Portofino, Rapallo, Santa Margherita Ligure—one picturesque fishing village after another on this spectacularly beautiful coast of lush mountains and blue coves. And a fast road to Milan airport.

Sirmione, a resort since Roman times, on mountain-cradled Lake Garda in northern Italy. Easy excursions to Venice, Verona, Austria. Nearest airport at Milan.

Akti Apollon, Greece's sun coast on Homer's "wine-dark sea." Resort hotels at Palation, Phaliron, Glyphada, and Vouliagmeni, all next door to Athens and its airport.

Estoril and Cascais, the sophisticated Riviera of Portugal, right outside Lisbon. Long a favorite with exiled royalty and retired wealth. Use airport at Lisbon.

Dubrovnik, famous walled city on Yugoslavia's Dalmatian Coast. Spectacular surroundings, with unbelievably cheap, gentle Adriatic beaches nearby. Can be included on air round trip to Rome without extra charge. Nearby airport, U.S. connection in Rome.

Cruising by Ship. So far, we have only talked air travel. That's because it's the fastest, most convenient, least expensive way to go. But if you have the time and money, you might consider taking a ship at least one way.

Ship travel comes in three classes: first, cabin, and tourist, each an area with all facilities contained within itself. Some ships are all one class, and then you have free run of the whole boat.

The usual range of fares is from about $220 to $1,000 one way, depending on class, season (higher in summer), destination, quality and location of your cabin, and whether or not you're willing to share your cabin with a stranger. Children from one to 12 travel for half fare.

Steamer crossing may take anywhere from 4½ days to about one week, which is a vacation in itself. Meals are generally excellent and service tops; you can figure on paying tips to your cabin, dining and deck stewards equivalent in total to about 10 to 15 percent of your one-way fare.

All European package tours, except those specifically tied in with inclusive group fares, can also be bought from the tour operators in connection with a steamer crossing. You can also select a cruise, with various port calls, as part or all of your European trip.

DETAILS YOU NEED TO KNOW

Passport. Bring citizenship proof (best: birth certificate) to local federal courthouse or nearest U.S. Passport Agency. Also, two copies of recent front-view photo, 2½"x2½" on unglazed paper. Passport costs $10 for three years. If all members of your family travel together, they can be on same passport. Western European countries do not require visas for visits of less than three months.

Shots. Smallpox vaccination within three years is required. Get certificate, to be signed by doctor and stamped at local health department, from your airline or travel agent. Food and water in Europe these days are as safe as you'll find anywhere, but, as indeed at home, polio and tetanus shots are strongly recommended, as well as typhoid and paratyphoid for anyone who travels a great deal.

Airplane tickets. Limitations on excursion tickets, including those used under tour-basing and group-inclusive arrangements, are that you can't fly back sooner than the 15th day after your departure and no later than the 22nd. Also, you can't cross the ocean in either direction between 7 a.m. Friday and 7 a.m. Monday. Children under 12 pay 50 percent of adult fare; under two, 10 percent. In the box below are a few sample fares showing round-trip prices on regular tourist and excursion tickets from New York.

Baggage. Under these fares you can take 44 pounds per person. Not included in weight limit are coats, cameras, purses, and reading material for the trip that you carry yourself. Remember, don't start out fully loaded if you intend to do much shopping.

Money. Traveler's checks are safest. Don't bother changing your money before you fly over; there are change booths in arrival halls of all international airports. Major credit cards are accepted at many hotels, restaurants, car rental offices, and shops. Get a currency conversion table from your travel agent, and always carry it with you.

Hotels. Don't feel you must pick the most expensive. Western Europe is right up to date, and local color stops at the bathroom door even at most country inns, however quaint they appear.

In general, European hotels are ranked by their governments in different classes, depending on price and luxury. You will find any hotel rated second class or higher perfectly acceptable, and quite often there are third class hotels which are just fine, particularly in the countryside.

Rooms without baths usually have washbasins with hot and cold running water, baths and toilets down the hall. Breakfast, generally included in room price, is "continental": coffee, rolls, butter, juice.

Except when bought in package plans, prices range from about $6 or $7 for a double room with bath in Portugal to $15 or $20 a day in Paris, with a wide range in between. For modern European atmosphere with an American touch of home, book in the Hilton International Hotels you'll find in most major cities—and such interesting Mediterranean vacation centers as Malta, Tunis, and Cyprus.

Tipping. Tips of 15 percent are generally included as "service" on your hotel and restaurant bills. Leave another five percent for your waiter and chambermaid. Baggage porters get about 20 to 25c per bag unless on tour whose price includes tips. Key man to tip is your hotel's concierge (something like a bell captain), who can provide many services: detailed information, tickets for sight-seeing tours, theater reservations, etc. Best tip him in advance about 25 to 50 percent of a day's room rate.

Shopping. You can bring back $100 worth of foreign purchases per person duty-free, including one quart of alcoholic spirits per adult. For purchases in excess of $100, check free booklet, Custom Hints, available from your nearest U.S. Customs office, which lists duties on about 100 common items.

WHAT'S YOUR BEST WAY TO SEE EUROPE?

Continued

The following ten tours have been selected by the editors of Better Homes and Gardens because each gives you the most for your travel dollar. They cover the gamut—from group travel to exploring Europe on your own by car, from grand touring to concentrating on the countries you're most interested in, from jet travel to shipboard cruising. Unless otherwise stated, tour prices are based on round-trip fares from New York and hotel accommodations for two persons occupying one room. Nominal adjustments may be made in these prices for 1970. For more information on any of these tours you can write call the carriers or agencies operating them, or better yet, talk to your travel agent. If you don't already know a travel agent, see the list on page 174 to find out how to pick one.

Europe's Liveliest Cities (This excellent new tour program also comes with the great price advantage of individual adventuring makes your visit to Europe a real bargain. For $496, you spend three nights each in Madrid, Paris, and London. Price includes round trip, good with bath and breakfast, buy other meals at restaurants of your choice), and at one sight-seeing tour in each city. With "superior" accommodations, same trip $564; prices slightly higher after April 15. You travel from Europe and back the cities with a group; but that you can be comfortable on your own. Weekly features. Similar package on 15-day basis are available also to London and ($355); London, Rome, Paris ($444); and London, Madrid, Rome ($442).

Europe's Highlights (An excellent 22-day tour of western Europe. visit England, Holland, France, Italy, Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Monaco and Liechtenstein, with extra time on your own at several fascinating stops, including whole days in Rome, Nice, and Lucerne. You'll fly by Pan Am to London for three days, then the North Sea by steamship to Holland, visit The Hague, Amsterdam, continue by seeing motor coach to Lucerne. On the seventh morning will enjoy a cruise on the Rhine River, then drive to Heidelberg. The next day takes you to Lucerne, the drive continues to Basel, then to Innsbruck, the Brenner Pass to Munich and Venice, from Venice to Florence (where you'll spend an afternoon of leisure morning sight-seeing), to Rome. You then follow the Mediterranean coast by train to Nice, after which you'll board your motor coach again for Avignon, Lyon, Paris, your last stop flying home.

erated by Percival Tours, Accommodations in first class, all deluxe hotels with private bath or shower. All meals except in London, Rome, and Paris, where only a continental breakfast is served. You may explore famous local restaurants of your choice. Departures April-October. Most, the group-includes air fare from New York is $100, single room $57. At highest season late May through early July, it runs at $1070.

ing "Thriftycar" (KLM) is the big buy for seeing Europe on your own: $320 for your KLM jet round-trip from New York to Amsterdam, plus use of a Hertz rental car (Volkswagen or similar) for three weeks, including 621 kilometers (621 miles). This bargain is based on two persons traveling together; three persons get $100 off; four persons, $200 off. You can drive wherever you please! If you take advantage of small, out-of-the-way towns and don't splurge on expensive restaurants, your travels in Europe won't cost much more than $100 per person for the trip, plus $560 per person for air fare and car insurance, though you'd be wise, of course, to allow yourself an allowance. "Tour" groups are formed by KLM for frequent departures from early spring through fall. Get dates from your travel agent; a deposit of $62.50 per person is required on booking, which is refundable if you cancel 30 days before your departure.

Flights in Italy (Alitalia) If you can extend this reasonably priced escorted Italy tour to spend yet a third day in Paris and London, or add and Lisbon. You'll fly Milan by Alitalia, then explore the country by deluxe coach: Verona, Venice, Florence, Perugia, Siena, Pisa, La Spezia, Portofino, and Genoa (for five days in Florence, Rome). Weekly departures from April through October, more in July and August and frequent departures for the rest of the year. Group rates for most departures is $1,000 per person, including round-trip air fare from New York, meals with private show, bath, breakfast and one glass of wine daily, most sightseeing, local taxes, and tips. In August, tour costs $579). The deposit for single room is $100. On the 15th day of your trip, counting your departure date from the States, you can fly home from Milan or continue on your extensions. The Paris-London extension costs $159, the extra week in Madrid and Lisbon, $135, sight-seeing included. Single room supplement: $35.

3 Weeks in Scandinavia (SAS) For this top-quality tour, SAS flies you to Copenhagen, and the Maupintour organization takes you on a circular journey through Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. Highlights include the Hans Christian Andersen country, Stockholm, the Swedish lakes, Oslo, and a fjords cruise. Overland transportation is by sight-seeing coach; excellent hotels are used throughout. Departures at least once a week from early May through the middle of September. Prices, including air fare from New York, range from about $990 to about $1,250, depending on date. Single room supplement: $90. Special extras include luncheon with a private family in Norway, gala dinner parties and evening entertainments.

The Best of Britain (BOAC)

This guided tour of England and Scotland is highly recommended if you also want to pay a short visit to the continent afterwards. The tour itself takes 14 full days, leaving you another six to see Paris, Rome, Madrid, or whatever. Price of your tour through Britain is $316, which includes extensive sight-seeing, 15 nights in good hotels (though some of them will not be able to provide you with private baths) and most meals. You'll see London, Lincoln, Harrogate, Edinburgh, Loch Lomond, the English lake district, Chester and North Wales, Stratford and the Shakespeare country on this Pageant "First Class" motorcoach tour. Frequent BOAC departures from April through September. Buy this tour on a tour-based round trip ticket, whose price will be determined by your farthest destination (see samples in air fare chart). Assuming Paris or Madrid to be your final destination, and tying in city packages wherever you might go, you can thus figure the basic cost of your three weeks in Europe, except in high season, to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $750 to $800, including air fare, your tour of Britain, and the visit to the continent.

Spain and Portugal (Iberia)

It's hard to find another group tour that gives you so much for so little money. The price is $320 from New York for two weeks, including transportation, sight-seeing, hotels with private bath, and breakfasts. You have to buy your own lunches and dinners, but prices in Spain and Portugal are often surprisingly low. You fly Iberia to Madrid, where you have six full days. During this time you may take a number of optional excursions to Toledo, El Escorial, Segovia and La Granja. Total additional cost of these excursions is $24.55, including three days of good lunches, and you should take advantage of this bargain. After Madrid, you go to Seville and to Lisbon, from where you return on the 15th day of your trip. If you want to see the south of Spain, we recommend a very good option offered with Iberia's "Ole Tour": you spend only three days in Madrid instead of six; the other three days you travel to Granada, Torremolinos on the Costa del Sol, and Algeciras, rejoining the tour in Seville. This extension costs $80 and includes all meals. Weekly departures from March to November, frequent departures other times.

The Ancient World

You'll cover all the major cities of ancient Rome and Greece, and, in addition, much of Turkey, on the 3-week "Greco-Antiquity" tour operated by American Express. Pan Am flies you to Rome, returns you from Athens, and in between, by air, ship, and air-conditioned bus, you visit Palermo, Syracuse, Taormina, Messina, Brindisi, Corfu, Salonica, Istanbul, Izmir (Smyrna), Ephesus, Corinth, and much, much more. The all-inclusive price ranges from $946 for departures in late April and late September to $1,036 in top season. Single room supplement is $45.

Mediterranean Cruise (Cunard)

The Caronia leaves New York on May 3, 1968, for its 40-day spring cruise with 15 ports of call: Madeira, Tangiers, Malta, Alexandria, Beirut, Haifa, Athens, Naples, Villefranche, Barcelona, Montreal, Malaga, Gibraltar, Lisbon, Cherbourg and Southampton, after which you can stay in Europe as long as you wish and catch any

IT'S FREE FROM BARWICK.

A book which takes all the confusion out of buying carpet. Once you read it, you can march fearlessly into any carpet store and know just what to look for. (And what to steer clear of.) And—you'll have a whole batch of fresh new decorating ideas.

This valuable book comes from the Barwick Carpet people. Naturally. Who else makes so many different kinds of carpet. And puts so much research behind each one. Cunarder home that's convenient for you; your return trip is included in the cruise price. Fares range up from $988 per person, but a more realistic figure and well worth the money for the pleasures of a cruise, is $1,650, which buys an outside stateroom with one bed and upper berth on one of the higher decks. For two beds on the same deck you pay $1,850, but an upper berth is perfectly comfortable. If you're contented with an inside room, you can get one on "A" Deck for $1,500, again with upper berth.

For a real long vacation

Perhaps the best general extended European tour for vacationers who want to go by ship is the "European Fiesta" of American Express. The trip through Europe by motor coach alone takes 30 days; your ocean crossings will require at least another eight. It's the works: London, Amsterdam, Brussels, Luxembourg, Heidelberg, Lucerne, Innsbruck, Venice, Florence, Rome, Pisa, Monte Carlo, Marseilles, Barcelona, Alicante, Granada, Seville, Madrid, Biarritz, and Paris, just to mention some of the high spots. You can start almost any time from the beginning of April to the middle of October, traveling on ships of every major line, depending on the date of your departure. The complete price, including good tourist class accommodations aboard the boats, will come to about $1,150 out of season and $1,500 in season. As usual on all of the tours, most meals are included, and you can generally count on a room with bath. The price of the tour alone ranges from about $650 to $800, and it's available also if you fly.

To make your plans for these or other European trips, see your travel agent. If you don't know an agent, pick a member agent of the American Society of Travel Agents—from your telephone directory or by writing to ASTA, 360 Lexington Ave., New York, New York 10017.

The Same Scene Painted In The Exquisite Colors Of The Four Different Seasons All 4 Large Prints Only $1

Never before in the history of art has a famous artist had the patience and dedication to capture the exquisite beauty and true feeling of the changing seasons by painting the same scene at different times of the year.

October Morn is one of the most famous and popular scenes ever painted by Robert Wood, America's favorite landscape painter. Now, this same beautiful Autumn scene can be treasured in the glorious colors of Spring, Summer and Winter too!

But you cannot possibly appreciate the full color and irresistible appeal of these unique paintings by looking at the small illustrations shown above. The fabulous colors and subtle seasonal variations can only be appreciated when you see the exquisite, large full-color reproductions.

This is Robert Wood's greatest triumph... the brilliant climax of a lifetime dedicated to painting the natural splendors of America.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR.®

"Give it to me straight, Doc. How do I feel?"

Although he grudgingly endorses the City Council's plan to spend $10 million for a new auditorium, Pat O'Leary says he hopes the city fathers will repair his street so he can get there.

I read recently that 400,000 people, 20,000 companies, and 150 universities are engaged in America's space program. Whether Russia can be beaten to the moon is still to be determined, but there's no shortage of our people to blame if we don't.

While building some shelves in the garage, I again discovered that—for some reason unknown to me—a "two by four" is neither two inches thick nor four inches wide. Thankfully, a hefty stack of old newspapers hides my less than perfect measurements.

As the Rev. George Hall remarked last Sunday, "Far too many people seem to expect that Hell will be as much fun as the path leading there."

The season's first snowfall reminded me that two-car garages ought to be restricted to two-shovel families.

The arrival of the bill for a new roof on our house prompted Christine to note that the rainy day we'd been saving for finally had arrived.

With Detroit manufacturers calling back so many cars for possible defects, Aunt Opal can't understand why they keep overlooking her clattering nine-year-old model.

"The trouble with our new hospital," complained Dr. Bob Hannelly, "is that it provides too much comfort. I can't convince some of my patients that what they need most is to get back to work."

My wife, Christine, is almost perfect. In fact, she is even able to understand why I'm not.

Rosemary, our international-minded teen-ager, thinks it would be wonderful to have a foreign student live with us, so long as it was clearly understood that we didn't have to pretend to be a typical American family.

Judy came home with the excited word that she will be learning something called The New Mathematics in the fifth grade, and I wisely refrain from remarking that her mother has been using it on her check stubs for years.

I suppose I am a reasonably handy man, but my youngsters have finished more of our furniture than I have, using the word finish in its most absolutely final sense.

Rosemary stayed with the Mart children Saturday, and reported at the breakfast table next morning that they wear out baby-sitters faster than shoes.

When I spoke to Chris about retiring to a sunnier climate some day, she was all misty-eyed. "You hate to picture me growing old?" I asked. "No," she replied, dabbing at her eyes, "I hate to picture you spending your last 20 years in baggy Bermuda shorts and a baseball cap."

A new house was under construction on our block this fall, and it provided more than its share of excitement.

Neighborhood wives somehow managed to find 10 or 15 spare minutes in the evenings or on weekends to inspect the half-completed kitchen, count the closets, or marvel at the king-size stone fireplace.

We men took note of some new building materials, and mentally drafted our own plans to finish off the basement. The children collected odds and ends of wood for their own construction projects, or tried to balance themselves on a board lying across a couple of sawhorses.

The contractor—perhaps accustomed to such goings-on—didn't seem to mind. In fact, he stopped by a couple of times to assist with the spontaneous tours.

What called the affair to mind was a speaker at PTA last week, who said that our neighborhood badly needs a "community center." I think another three-bedroom home—about two-thirds completed—would do just fine.

BUILD A FINANCIAL LEGACY FOR YOUR CHILD

Peter Lindberg, Editor

To many, "legacy" conjures up images of baronial estates, massive bequests, and sky-high taxes. Yet this is far from true. You can leave a really significant legacy to your children without being in the six (or even five) figure income bracket.

The best legacy you can give comes in two parts. First, it's the solid financial base you build for your child's special goals, from that once-in-a-lifetime travel trip or down payment on a house to a substantial college fund. In the long run, of course, your youngster's college is the most rewarding goal you can save toward. Besides its many other benefits, a college degree is worth real money. Studies now show college graduates average $140,000 more earnings in their lifetime—which makes the $8,000 to $12,000 (or more) tab for college costs an especially wise investment.

The second side to your financial legacy is instilling sound money management values in your child. It means giving him the guidance he needs to develop his own money sense—and the chance to test it out. Your own money-handling habits will have a surprisingly strong influence here. And, if you give your child a voice (even a small one) in charting the family financial course, you'll reinforce the lessons he's learning from you.

To help you with this two-part legacy, we've set out some ways you can accumulate a financial reserve for your child. We've also pointed up areas where he might participate in the investing process, too.

• A savings account is one of the best ways to invest small amounts for your child. Many parents open an account for their children right away, building it with holiday and birthday gift money—and with small "extra" sums.

Then when a child has a basic knowledge of money (usually when he's about 5 or 6), take him to the bank with you. Ask a staff member to explain a savings account, and how the passbook works. Here you have an excellent chance to point out how others will pay him interest for the chance to use his money.

Besides the training value, fixed-income investments like savings accounts (and bonds) are safe, stable investments. If the economy heads into a recession, your child's dollars will be more apt to stay intact, and they will also buy more if prices drop.

While the interest rate on a savings account can change on fairly short notice (usually within six months), the amount you've invested could be withdrawn to put elsewhere.

Interest paid on a blue-chip bond can't be changed during its term, so you can rely on a certain return if the bond is held to maturity. However, if a bond must be sold before maturity, the return will be less; or the bond may have to be sold at a loss because of a decline in the price of bonds. Conversely, selling can also be profitable if bond prices rise. To avoid this chancy situation, try to purchase bonds that mature about the time the money will be needed.

A savings account (or any other investment for your child) must be kept in proper balance with your own financial goals. Putting away large amounts for a college fund, for instance, doesn't make sense if you're jeopardizing your savings, insurance, or investment program—or shorting yourself on disability or retirement plans.

• Investments like stocks, mutual funds, and real estate do not guarantee a return on your money. But along with the greater risk comes a chance for a higher return than on savings or bonds. Many good-quality stocks have risen greatly in recent years, and should continue to do well as long as the economy stays vigorous.

Still—and an older youngster should understand this—stocks generally should be picked on a long-term basis, not for "get-rich-quick" speculation where risks are higher. Don't invest heavily for your child if there's a chance you'll need the money in less than three to five years, since you might well have to sell at a loss in these early years.

Don't overlook the New York Stock Exchange's Monthly Investment Plan. With a broker, you pick a stock and arrange to invest a certain amount of money at regular intervals—as little as $40 every three months. When the price of the stock goes down, your money buys more shares; when it goes up, you get fewer shares, but those you already own have gone up, too. Over a long period, this "dollar-averaging" can yield good profits.

Mutual funds are another way to invest with more reliability than if you were on your own. Purposes and yields of these mutual funds vary, but they depend upon professional management and diversification among a variety of stocks, bonds, or a combination of both.

Professional money managers often suggest spreading your savings between fixed-income and equity (growth) investments as a hedge against deflation and inflation. This, of course, spreads a small investment program thin; many negotiable bonds cannot be bought in denominations lower than $500. In addition, it's usually better not to take chances with your child's money until the basic reserve fund has been built up to $1,000 or more. This makes savings accounts, U.S. savings bonds, or blue-chip corporate or municipal bonds the best initial investments.

• Real estate investments often require more money than your child's total fund represents—and they're often difficult to convert to cash readily. The income tax depreciation deduction probably will be of little advantage to your youngster either, because he pays a federal income tax until his annual net income amounts to at least $900. In general, real estate is one investment you can put aside when you are working with modest sums.

• Life insurance on your child serves two purposes: to help pay the expense of his illness and burial if he should die early in life, and to assure him this protection if he becomes uninsurable before he can buy insurance on his own. The rates, too, are lower at earlier ages, and cash values accumulate sooner in emergencies. For example, $100 a year will purchase about $10,000 whole life insurance on a two-year-old. When you buy, consider a rider that guarantees he can buy more insurance without a physical exam.

Before investing heavily in children's life insurance, though, be sure your own life insurance is adequate. At the least, it should give the family a comfortable cushion until younger children are in school full-time. Or, if they're older, the proceeds should be large enough to give their college bill a boost.

Many parents make larger gifts of money or property to their children once they're financially protected against disability, death, or other emergencies. When deciding whether you are able to do this, remember that the cash value of permanent-type insurance could be used as an emergency fund, although the death benefit will be reduced by the amount you borrow on a policy. Two more personal questions before you decide to make substantial gifts to a child: Are you willing to give up control of some of your property by making gifts? Will your youngster feel too prosperous, and tend to spend too freely?

On the plus side, there can be some definite tax advantages to transferring property to your child. Because the income from the property will be taxed at his earning level rather than at your bracket, the total tax usually will be much less. If your child's income is less than $900 a year, he won't pay any income tax. Besides this, the amount you give away usually will be excluded from your estate for death tax and probate purposes. If your total estate amounts to, say, $150,000, your estate settlement costs might be reduced as much as 25 to 30 percent of the amount given away.

Remember, though, that a minor child usually can't manage or sell property held in his name without the appointment of a guardian or conservator. This could be important if you expect that the property you give him should be disposed of before he becomes 21. Often this problem can be avoided by transferring property to a custodian named under the Uniform Gifts to Minors Act, which has been adopted in most states; a trust also will help you avoid this transfer problem. Be sure to check with an attorney.

Though it may not make a major contribution to your child's total savings program, an allowance plays a vital teaching role. Usually, when a youngster can tell one coin from another, he's ready for some allowance. At the start keep it in the pennies category, perhaps on a twice-a-week basis; older children can plan on a weekly or monthly basis.

When the child's ability to handle money grows, you can raise the allowance. You could decide on this increase during a family financial session, since the planning and reviewing is one of the most important things an allowance does for a child. Be sure to provide for routine expenses (lunches and carfare), occasional expenses (hobbies or treats), and allow for some unplanned expenses to give him some leeway. You can arrange lenient borrowing terms for large purchases if you like—or treat this as a special-occasion gift.

Saving allowance money is something that comes gradually. Small children have hazy notions of time, and can't be expected to save for long-range goals. Teen-agers, however, can understand the value of saving small amounts for large items.

Like many adults, children indulge in spending sprees especially around age seven or eight. This situation takes extra understanding on your part; you may even give a child money for a special event he'd otherwise miss. However, older children may have to face this reality without assistance. In any case, an allowance shouldn't be a weapon against unruly behavior; this only confuses a child about money.

As a child grows, he may think of earning money outside the family. There are many of these opportunities, from the traditional baby-sitting, car-washing, and grass-cutting to "businesses" like raising small animals or selling craft projects. In most cases, the long-range value is in being on his own, not on how much he can earn. And no job should interfere with a child's getting the most out of school.

Putting
garbage in is easier than taking garbage
out.

If you're tired of taking out the garbage, put in a National Disposer Model 770C. You won't be sorry.

For one thing, it's convenient. Just drop the garbage in, drop the Magnetouch® Cover Control in place and it starts. Silverware or other items can't drop in while disposer is operating.

Another thing. A National takes even tough stuff like chicken bones and corn husks that other disposers may balk at. And should it jam, the exclusive Reversomatic II® Control will eliminate the jam automatically.

What's more, a National is quiet because it's completely insulated. And durable because the grinding direction is reversed each time the disposer is started, which doubles the life of the grinders. Like more details? See your dealer, or write.

GOOD NEWS FOR MEN!

Stabilize your ladder with this 48-inch-wide safety attachment that straddles a window.

Made of lightweight, rust-proof aluminum, the accessory is very easy to attach to any ladder—wood or metal.

With it, you'll be able to paint and clean areas you could not reach safely before—windows and window frames, gutters, eaves, and many of the places that used to be just beyond that last rung.

The attachment holds the top of the ladder away from the wall to give you a far more natural working position. Non-slip, nonskid rubber tips protect painted surfaces.

SAF-T-ARM, $9.95 in stores or ppd. from mfr. (add 75c west of the Mississippi). Fracon Co. Inc., 690 Wellesley St., Weston Mass. 02193.

To operate, set the outer dial at the time you want the heater to come on, then turn the time pointer to the time of day. Plug in the timer and heater, and in the morning the preheated car engine will be ready to go.

Keep the metal parts shipshape while your boat is in storage. Just brush on a coat of this protective liquid vinyl.

The liquid adheres to metal of all shapes and sizes, keeps its elasticity in all temperatures. When it's time to recommission your craft, just loosen the edge of the coating with your fingernail and peel it off in one piece.

Available in transparent blue or clear (the clear is ideal for protection of auto chrome).

Peel Away Boat Metal Guard, $5.95 a pint in marine shops or from mfr. Other sizes available. Marine Development & Research Corp., 381 Park Ave. S., N.Y. 10016.

Plenty of draft for any fireplace new or old! Even fireplaces unusable for years will behave like new with the help of this mechanical draft. It also helps poorly designed fireplaces, ones with inadequate flue capacity, and those near taller houses which create wind pockets.

Available in sizes for most fireplaces and for installation in attics or on flat roofs.

There are 19 different circular saw blade types, for any portable, bench, or arm machine. The saber blades come in nine different 1/4-inch universal shank and 1/2-inch reciprocating shank sizes in lengths from three to 12 inches.

Damaged concrete? Now you can professionally resurface or repair those holes and cracks—even hairline cracks.

This 100 percent epoxy binder system provides excellent strength for permanent repairs. You can use it indoors or outdoors—on walls, floors, steps, sidewalks, and driveways.

May be applied over any clean surface, no primer needed. Spread it thin and don't be afraid to feather the edges—it will remain intact even when troweled to a thickness of $\frac{1}{8}$ -inch or less. This makes it easy to blend repaired areas into the original surface.

To apply, add thoroughly mixed hardener and emulsion to the dry material, then trowel to desired thickness. Can also be used for setting flagstone, slate, tile, or brick.

Crowds are always part of holiday travel, no matter how you go. And they can be irksome and even dangerous—especially if you are traveling by car.

Naturally, your best way to cope with crowds is to plan your holiday trip for times when other people are least likely to be traveling and to places others are unlikely to visit. It's not really difficult.

For example, on a major holiday like Christmas, travelers leave for their destinations as soon as the work week ends the day before the holiday and return as close as possible to the end of the last free day. If you're willing to forego a few hours of your holiday, you could wait until late the night before or the following morning to leave; and if the place to go this holiday seems to be the sunny land of beach resorts, you could select the mountains instead and probably find serenity.

Often, of course, circumstances do not permit you to avoid crowds, so to cope with them keep in mind some travel tips good for any season.

First, decide well in advance of the holiday, when, where, and how you want to go. If it's a trip to see the relatives, then your destination is set, but let the folks know early so they can make plans at their end. If you'll need hotel, rental car, or transportation reservations for your trip, make them well ahead of time; otherwise, you can't expect to have a chance, even be sure of getting accommodations.

If you are traveling by plane, train, or bus, consider special circumstances that holidays often create for the car. Terminals are jammed, schedules tight, and ticket agencies busy and frequently harried.

Getting to a train or bus terminal well before departure time will increase your chances of getting the seat you want. You might consider taking an early-morning or late-evening train or bus as midday and early-evening departures usually are filled to capacity. And if you are traveling any distance by train, you may want to reserve accommodations in a Pullman or Pullman instead of riding in a coach. The cost is nearly double that of coach, but you may find the ride less fatiguing and well worth the price.

If you're going by plane, remember to make your travel reservations at least a month ahead of time. During major holidays like Christmas and New Year's, even six weeks is not too far in advance, considering the great number of people making plans to travel then. Since airports are crowded during holidays, it's a good idea to pick up your tickets in advance and also ask for baggage claim tags so you can tag your luggage at home and won't have to stand in line to check your bags at the terminal.

Most airlines ask that you be at the airport at least 30 minutes before your scheduled departure time. During a holiday, take into account heavier auto traffic in town when making your arrangements for transportation to the airport and give yourself a little more time than usual to get there.

When you arrive at your destination, leave your telephone number there with the airline so they can call you if there are changes in your return flight arrangements. And always reconfirm your return ticket a few days before your departure date.

HOW TO COPE WITH HOLIDAY TRAVEL

Most important in planning a holiday trip is to find out when traffic will be at its peak to and from your destination. Try to plan your travel outside of those periods. Call ticket information offices of the carriers and ask about holiday schedules and traffic, or if you are using a travel agent for the trip, get his advice.

The two busiest holidays for the carriers, of course, are Christmas and New Year's—more specifically, the three days before Christmas and the three days after New Year's. Passenger traffic is relatively light Christmas Day and New Year's Day.

When your airline reservation involves making connections, be sure your ticket allows sufficient layover time. Heavy holiday traffic frequently causes delays in airline schedules, and you may need extra layover time to make connections. If you miss a connecting flight during a holiday, you may have a long wait and anxious moments before a flight is available on another flight to your destination.

If you decide to go by car, make sure you have plenty of time for an unhurried drive getting there and back. Again, for the highways are traditionally crowded and congested during holidays. Go over a road map beforehand and outline your route. If you will have to spend a night on the way, decide where you will stop, then call or write ahead for hotel or motel reservations. You may prefer to pack a lunch so you can stop and eat when you like, rather than buck the crowds at meal stops along the way.

Make sure your car is ready for the trip. Have it inspected and safety checked. If it is wintertime, special preparations like snow tires and antifreeze might be necessary. Member work piles up at garages and service stations as the days near, so allow time for your car to be serviced.

On the road, take brief rest stops, have a relaxed lunch and plan to arrive at your hotel or your destination before sundown. Driving at dusk is always hazardous, particularly when traffic is heavy. And take it easy on the road. The National Safety Council says that most fatal accidents occur early during holiday periods when people rush to their destinations. That goes for the return trip too.

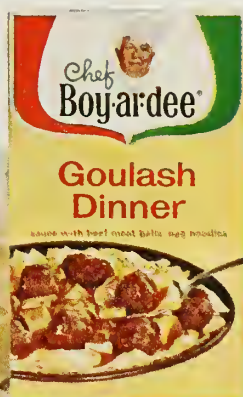

However you go, it's a good idea to travel light during the holiday. Fit whatever you need into one or two bags. Carry little or no hand baggage. Supervising your luggage can be difficult enough during normal travel times, but during a holiday it can be particularly irksome. You can't always count on finding a porter in a crowded terminal, and you may have to tote all your luggage yourself.

Traveling when there are crowds can be especially frustrating, so get plenty of rest the night before your trip. Don't overpack and retire early. You may be keyed up over the trip, so give yourself time to relax and fall asleep. Be wary of sleeping pills. They may help you rest, but they also can leave you groggy the next morning.

Finally, start your travel day with a hearty breakfast. A good sound start can give you the extra zip you need to get through the day, and the crowds, happily and safely.

END-OF-YEAR TAX PLANNING

the possibility of a 1968 surcharge on your federal income tax, year-end tax planning this year becomes even crucial. But before you decide on shifting income according to the steps outlined below, take time out to consider the results.

Remember, you'll actually be paying the extra tax one year earlier on any income you shift into 1967. For instance, if you find you can switch $1,000 of taxable income (income deductions and exemptions) to either 1967 or 1968 by your timing of income collections, or your payment of deductible expenses. If your top tax-rate bracket is 22 percent, you'll owe a "regular" tax of $220 (22 percent of $1,000), whether the $1,000 of income is taxed in 1967 or 1968. If there's a 10 percent tax surcharge in 1968, you'll owe $242 more on the $1,000 (10 percent of $220) in '68—or a total of $242. In that case, by shifting the $1,000 to 1967 instead, you'll pay only $220 in tax. However, you'll pay the year earlier, which means you may have to dip into savings or borrow the amount of the added 1967 tax. If you get a 6 percent loan to cover it, you've actually lost 6 percent of your $22 tax savings by paying the tax in 1967.

Even if you don't think there will be a 1968 tax surcharge, you should review your tax picture now—especially if you anticipate any very large changes in your income in 1968. This is because your top tax brackets for '68 would then be considerably higher than '67—which makes income-shifting a definite money-saver.

How much you'll save on taxes by shifting income between 1967 and 1968, follow these steps:

1. Estimate your taxable income (gross income less deductions and exemptions). Then figure your approximate top tax bracket for both 1967 and 1968.

2. Decide how much taxable income you can properly shift from one year to the other by timing your income collections and your payment of deductions.

Of course, if most of your income comes from wages or salaries, there's not much you can do to shift your income; waiting until your final 1967 paycheck after January 1 does not save any tax. And though you can delay a tax deduction by making payment for a service until January, 1968, speeding up a deduction isn't as simple. You must actually owe the expense at the time you pay it before IRS will approve it as a deduction. Advance payment for services you haven't received won't qualify, except when prepaying interest and state property taxes.

3. Apply your estimated top tax rates for both 1967 and 1968 to the taxable income that's "shiftable." This gives you a 1967 and 1968 tax estimate on the income.

Next, if you think a surcharge is coming, add the 10 percent tax surcharge to the regular 1968 tax on this "shiftable" income. If this total tax is the same or less than the 1967 tax on the income you can shift, it's best not to accelerate taxable income into 1967. If the 1968 tax (including the surcharge) on your "shiftable income" is more than on the 1967 tax, you should consider shifting the income. Of course, if you have to borrow to pay the tax in '67 this may influence your decision to shift income.

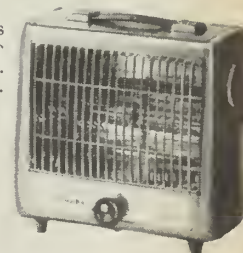

If you don't expect a '68 tax surcharge, use the figures above to guide your decision, following the same procedure (4.).

CHRISTMAS IS SOMETHING YOU MAKE YOURSELF...

By Elizabeth D. Craster and Margo Garrity

This is an issue filled with beautiful ideas—and, hopefully, enough instructions in words and drawings to help you make each thing you like. Many of the craft projects are designed for children. Others call for more dexterity and patience, so they're for you. The papier-mache creche shown here is one of the more difficult. But it's worth the effort because it's a treasure you'll keep for years—and you needn't be "artistic" to make figures that will please you and your family. Christmas wouldn't be Christmas without good things to eat, so we've included ideas for cookies, party fare, gifts, and the big Holiday Dinner itself.

You'll be using the basic papier-mache technique for this Nativity scene. Organize materials on a table that's well protected with several thicknesses wax paper before starting project.

Large camel: Crush three sheets newspaper into balls. Tape together for body. Flatten bottom side. For head and neck roll one page newspaper, then fold in half. Tape to body. (To make small camel, use half of above proportions.) Use two 3" drinking straws for each leg on large camel; smaller one takes four pieces cut 2 1/2" long. Tape to bodies. Cover camels completely with long narrow strips paper toweling. Brush areas with glue; wrap, glue again. Continue in this fashion. Shape head while damp to flatten nose. Use towel strips at angle to connect legs and body. Crush small pieces toweling; glue to legs for knees in front, leg joints in back. Make hoofs same way. Allow to dry before proceeding. Papier-mache legs and body as above. Glue small balls of glued toweling to head and under chin. Make tails from towel-glue combination.

Paint entire bodies dark brown. Dry. Add dabs of yellow-orange then use lighter shade of gold or yellow. Brush glue over blanket and reins made from string to make stiff; allow to dry before painting.

Sheep: Crush 1/4 page newspaper into ball. Crush 1/8 newspaper sheet for head, making an oval. Tape to body; tilt head in the direction desired. For legs, cut drinking straws in four 1" pieces. Place in standing, sitting, and lying positions. Tape, then glue to underside. Glue 3 paper layers together for ears; cut into 1/2" squares for each ear. Round off one end, glue in place.

For woolly effect, glue long, narrow paper towel strips to entire body. Repeat several times. Glue on tail made from rolled piece of paper towel. Give several coats white paint. Crib: Cut cardboard 1 1/2"x2 1/2" for bottom of crib. Sides measure 1"x2 1/2"; ends, 1 1/2"x1". Cut two "X" shapes about 3/8" wide and 2" long for crib. Paint to match stable.

Infant: Shape body by crushing paper to fit inside crib. Wrap with fabric brushed with glue.

Creche figures: (Body) Fold one sheet newspaper in half lengthwise, then fold twice until it measures 6"x7 1/2". Roll, tape into cone shape. Trim bottom edge, so cone stands upright.

(Head) Crush 1/4 page newspaper into round ball. Attach to cone with masking tape. Then fold another sheet measuring 7"x12" the long way twice, then fit to fill gaps at neck. Tape to head and body. Cut strips about 1/2" wide; glue vertically around neck and body.

(Arms and hands) Place a 12" pipe cleaner on back of neck, extending to front for arms.

Manger scene—Mission style: Our version is constructed of a rectangular box and cutout arches; two square sections of cardboard pillars topped with plastic balls, and a semicircular piece of cardboard glued to top of box for bell and cross. Cover church with spackling compound mixed to thickness of paint. (For 1 cup spackling compound mixture, add 1/4 cup white glue to prevent crazing.) Let dry; paint with pale yellow paint. Figures are made from cone-shape balsa; heads, legs, and trim are glued on separately. For camels, trace outline from a primer, then sketch on rectangular piece of balsa and carve. Make sheep from balsa rolled in sawdust and painted.

Drawings: Tom Hall

Bend loops at the ends of the pipe cleaner to form hands. Now coat the entire cone and head with glue. Attach 1/2" strips first to the neck that holds the arms in place, then over the entire body. Finally, wrap the glue-coated pipe cleaner with newspaper strips. Tape some hands in praying position, others flat to hold gifts.

Sleeves. Drape two rectangular fabric pieces to fit arms. Dip in glue, then drape over arms. Turn under one-inch cuffs. Robes. Cut fabric about 12"x24". Dip in water, then glue as before. Drape around figure. Glue to base. Cut off excess robe and cardboard, following flow of robes. (Put on Joseph's robe after beard and hair have been applied.)

Beards and hair. (Below) Dip string in glue in chin area. Press string up and down (never pulling). Work from one side to other. Add mustache.

For hair, allow string to extend to shoulders. Bring up to top of head. Repeat all around. Saturate beards and hair with glue. Let dry overnight.

Crowns. Cut two narrow strips of cardboard; fit to head, then tape ends together. Cover one into points. Cover crown with fabric. Turban is cut from cloth rectangle, draped around head and glued in place.

Stable: Select corrugated cardboard wider than figures are tall. Into shape shown. Add large flat piece for roof. Cover with 2" newspaper squares in papier-mache fashion. As glue dries, give it a coat of brown paint first, then dab lighter yellow-brown.

Painting: Let glue dry completely before you start to paint. Cover all faces, legs, arms with white acrylic paint. Pencil in features, then paint black with fine-line brush. For robes and crowns, select bright colors. Paint hair, beards black. To achieve the wonderful high-gloss finish, spray several coats clear plastic after each application. There are many additional ways to trim the figures. Use gold foil paper, rickrack, beads as shown, then brush on clear plastic finish over the ornamentation. Women's gifts can be made from bottle stoppers or small boxes trimmed with sequins. For antique look on figures, rub shoe polish over paint.

NINE WAYS TO DECK A DOOR

These are door-stopping decorations! They are guaranteed to leave your guests planted in the portico—just for a minute to admire them. We created ours in a great variety of sizes—large for entryways range from mammoth to minuscule. Below are cardboard puppets ranging from oversized Santa to dapper dwarf. Opposite: a multitude of miniature mobiles; dainty mod-tog boots, richly hued reed wreaths. I don't feel these delightful decorations begrudge a door. Far from it! You'll find them adaptable to fireplaces (try hanging the mod-togs instead of the usual staid stockings). Or let our personable puppets brighten the walls—or beckon beguilingly from the window.

All our agile paper puppets, saluting Santa, rakish-reindeer, happy helper, and beflowered angel are fashioned from heavy cardboard and covered with a variety of glazed and plain gift wraps and art papers—trimmed with lace-paper doilies, and glued-on construction paper. Pronged metal paper fasteners are used to joint all movable parts of all the bodies.

Giant Santa above measures 62 inches from tip of cap to boots and is made from 12 different pieces of cardboard. Body measures 23"x20"—arms are made from two ovals, upper arm 11½"x7", lower arm 7½"x6" and hands 7 inches long, with cuffs 3½"x6". Leg ovals measure 6½"x6" with boots 12" long and 8" from heel to toe. Square head measures 11"x9½" with pointed cap 15"x10" wide. Cap band is 11"x4". Cut all parts with a sharp knife. Cover all but face with papers cut a half-inch larger than cardboard, then notched about every inch around edges. Turn notches to back side and glue to cardboard. Add gloves, boots, lace-doily cuffs, brown paper belt with jeweled buckle. Assemble all parts, allowing 1" to 2" for overlap. Drill holes with ice pick; insert fasteners. Create beard, mustache, and pompon from paper doilies.

Santa's helper (not illustrated) is cut out and assembled in the same way as St. Nick but on a much smaller scale. Circular body is 15" in diameter—head 8" round. Legs and arms are 6"x4½" wide (oval shaped with the ends cut off)—shaped hands 4"x4" and feet 4½" high, 5½" from heel to toe. Cap is a triangle 10"x10"x9" wide, which is glued 2½" over circular head. He's gaily dressed in a flowered and harlequin paper suit with smaller lace paper doilies for beard and trims.

Rakish reindeer below is made with squares, rectangles, long strips for legs, and a triangular head. Body is 14"x16" wide, legs are 20" long by 2" wide with a 2" v-shape cut for hoofs. Neck is a rectangle 16"x6" wide with a triangular head 14"x14"x9" wide. Do not try to joint these two parts—glue on head at neck at an angle. Horns are an overall 12" in height—ears 6½" long. Shape tail from a 9"x6" square.

Mobile Creche scene (not illustrated) is composed mainly of groups of figures individually cut out and then overlapped and glued together as in angels with Madonna, three Kings, birds, and lambs. Virgin is a rounded triangle 10"x10" by 7½" wide. Square angel figures are 4"x8" high with 2½" curved to a peak forming faces. Wings are pear-shaped halves 4" long and 2¼" wide. Madonna's head is glued to wing tips. The Kings are overlapping triangles 8½"x8½"x7" wide. Lambs are cut from 4½"x3" rectangles and grouped vertically. Joseph measures 8"x4", birds are cut from 3"x2½" squares, with the bull from a 6"x5" rectangle. Figures are trimmed with glued-on construction paper, foil.

Come-in candy wreaths—Press the whole family into and you can whip these together in a trice. Use as small as the size of the door warrants. This imposing door for three made on plastic foam bases measuring 16" and 12". Buy wrapped candy in different colors. Stick through the twisted paper at one end, insert in plastic and snip off the exposed twist of paper. Trim with tailored and streamers of velvet ribbon. Luminous bough in the ground is held firmly in planter with pebbles. To wrap tiny lights, start at the tip of each branch and secure with strips of green floral tape.

Mod-Socks (below) are an effective door as well as chimney accent. They're all made from the same basic rectangular shape measuring 25½"x12" wide. Cut a slightly indented shape from top to toe, flaring at both ends. On the other side, indent, flare out at heel—then abruptly taper in for the high heel models, straight for a low heel. Red Riding Hood boot is trimmed at top and bottom with polka-dot fabric, red and white felt buttons, red heel.

Safari boot: If fake fur fabric is not available, create extra-fake-fur by gluing on prong-shaped pieces of black felt and circles on a white felt base. By using different colors of felt other animal furs can be equally well counterfeited. For Made-moiselle Modeste—a snappy slipper and boot combination in blue and lime green trimmed with ball fringe.

Flower-bedecked angel (above) is made in much the same way as other paper puppets. One is ten sections. Body is a tapered rectangle 17"x8½" at top, 27" high. Feet are tapered ovals 8" and 3" wide. Allow for overlap of 2" when attaching them to body. Hands are long and 3" wide with overlap allowance. Tear shaped wings are 17½" and 10" wide. Attach wings 2¼" from edge of shoulder and arms 1" from shoulder tip. GREEN, GROWING GIFTS

For an unforgettable gift, choose from our specially selected array of plants. And, to make your gift doubly appreciated, why not personalize your planter? We've used inexpensive containers resourcefully transformed into small works of art. You start with paper paint pots, a bushel basket, and clay pots—then trick them up with paint, bangles and baubles.

Highlights of our holiday plants are from left to right: bright-berried holly, delicate cyclamen (boxed and ready to blast off), brilliant poinsettia, full-flowered begonia, Jerusalem cherry, snowy poinsettia, stately Norfolk pine, and a flaming azalea plant at far right.

Plan to pamper your traveling plants whether they're going next door or you're driving them to the other side of town. Steady the pot either by a hole cut in a flat box set inside the big one or with crumpled newspaper. Protect fragile blooms with tissue. Green drum (or hatbox), gold cylinder, and garden-variety cardboard box are safe methods of transportation. So the next time you attend an open house, make a hostess happy with a stunning bloom or foliage plant!

HOW TO DECORATE PLANT CONTAINERS

Continued

Star-studded pot in upper left corner is a paper paint pot you cover with star shapes cut from self-adhesive paper.

Octagonal boxes are oriental gift boxes available at Japanese gift shops or in gift-wrapping departments—these are ideal for small plants.

Green-drum gift-box plant tote is made by covering a round carton with foil paper. Wide metallic ribbons encircle carton top and bottom. Double strands of gift cord are looped around heads of corsage pins stuck through carton.

Tall gold cylinder will beautifully cover a small ivy-covered totem. Pin green-foil leaves in place and top with red-ribbon cascade.

Pink velvet over a clay pot gets delicate pattern from doily cutouts. Glue a width of fabric to bottom section of pot first (apply glue to pot and press the fabric in place). Then fit a strip over rim—notch fabric so it fits smoothly inside pot. Use any glue that dries clear.

Floral-fabric covering on a clay pot is started with the top inch of fabric glued on side up to rim. Make vertical cuts every two inches two-thirds of the way up sides and press into glued surface of pot as you stretch and overlap fabric. Cover rims of pot and saucer inside and out. Paint sides of saucer a matching color.

Hanging basket begins with a paint job for a paper paint bucket. Then, you glue narrow strips of felt in vertical lines up the sides. Suspend with velvet-cording strung through three holes spaced equidistant under the rim of the pot.

Cherub-ornamented container is the simplest of all to make. Paint a paper paint pot a far-out color, glue a strip of heavy yarn fringe under the rim, and pin a Christmas tree ornament or a medallion in place.

A garden tool and gloves with a fancy pot are difficult to match as a gift for a gardener. A plain plastic pot, a coat of white paint, and preglued paper stripes give a holiday flair.

Rust, pink, and orange yarn vibrantly transform this lightweight plastic foam flowerpot with "wild and woolly" color. Paint the lower half of pot with glue and wrap several rows of each color of yarn around pot and press into glue. Then paint top half with glue and wind additional yarn in place.

Make certain the pot in which your gift plant is growing will fit inside the container you choose to decorate for it. Form a deep saucer of three or four thicknesses of aluminum foil to cover bottom of fancy pot. This will catch overflow water which could damage the pot. After the holidays, wrap pot and store with other decorations for future Christmases.

Holly-sprig Christmas tree—To form your decorative stand three 9x3 $\frac{1}{4}$ x4 $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch blocks of florist foam on end tie together. Set another on top to get an 18-inch height. Taper the corners with a knife to make a cone shape 18 inches in diameter. Soak foam two hours before wrapping with a layer of chicken wire. Stand on shallow compote and insert six- to eight-inch-long sprigs of holly into foam. To keep fresh all through the holidays, add water daily by pouring over the top block—excess will soak into lower blocks. See the tempting skillet "Strawberry" Cookies (recipe page 46).

White pedestal planter is a spectacular way to present a Christmas plant, especially when the white theme is carried out into the blossoms of the plant, such as the poinsettia shown here. Use two unpainted white paper paint buckets separated by a decorative plastic-foam pedestal (available at floral and hobby shops). A white holiday corsage provides the decorative touch needed to put the container into the spirit of the holiday season.

Ribbon basket-weave cover gives a plastic pot a special note of gaiety. Weave the ribbon into a flat panel of fabric twice as wide as the pot is tall. Sew the ribbon ends together at top and bottom so they won't separate when pressed tight to the preglued pot.

Visit your fabric and notions shops or raid your sewing scraps for different materials and ornaments to use. Then give your imagination free rein and come up with original designs.

Miniature bushel basket (available in several colors) gets a beauty treatment from just two glued-on velvet ribbons.

CARE OF HOLIDAY PLANTS

In general, holiday plants need their soil on the moist side. Give them bright indirect light from south or east window.

Temperatures between 60 and 75 degrees are generally satisfactory. The higher the temperature in your home, the more moisture you should add to get into the air. A humidity tray is the ideal way to keep humidity up, but occasional misting of foliage will help the plant considerably.

Poinsettia. Keep soil evenly moist and place away from drafts which can make plant drop its leaves. Place in cool spot at night.

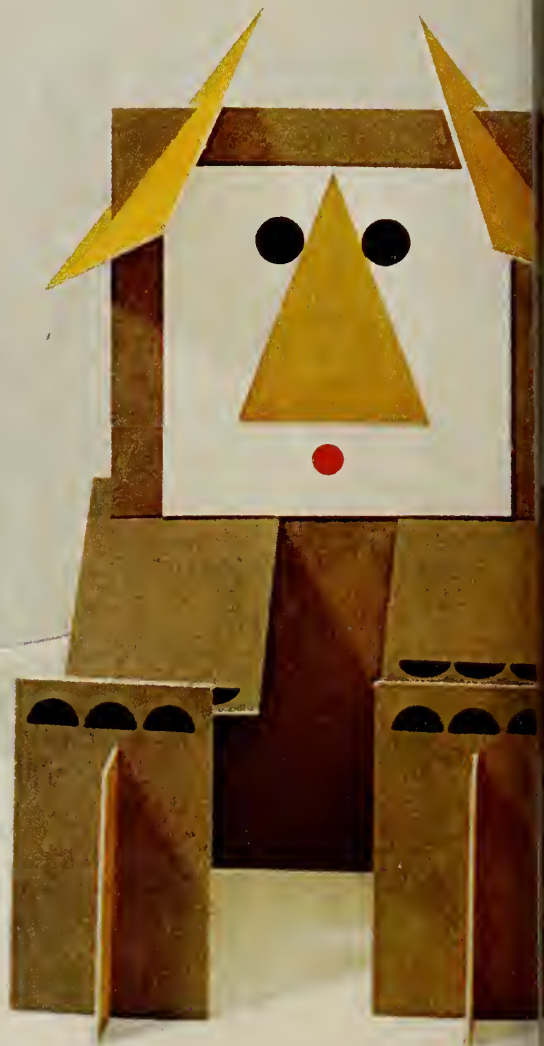

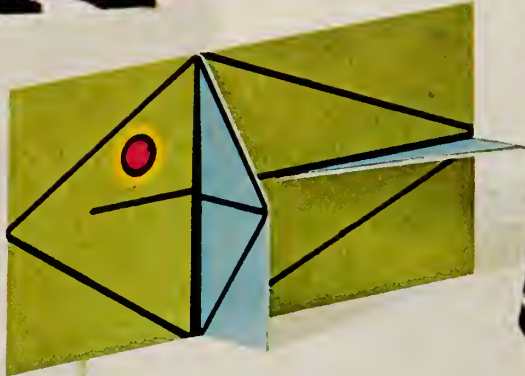

Cyclamen. This magnificent plant will flower for several months if it is kept in bright light and the soil is kept constantly moist. Set the pot in a shallow pan and add water to $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch depth. As soon as the water is absorbed, add more.

Azalea. Keep in as cool a place as you can, and the plant will hold its blooms well. Azaleas need acid soil, so if you wish to keep yours as a foliage plant, water every third week with vinegar water ($\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon vinegar per quart of water). Use tap water between treatments to keep soil moist. Christmas begonia. This shrubby plant covers itself with bright pink blossoms over an extended period of time if kept moist and cool (65 degrees). Plant will soon after blossoms fade and don't feel guilty about its demise. It wasn't your fault.

Chrysanthemum. These sturdy plants will perform well even if neglected somewhat. Keep soil moist and provide cool temperatures, and plant should stay in bloom several weeks.

Jerusalem cherry. Although a little tricky to keep blooming and setting fruit, this colorful little plant will give months of enjoyment. To bear fruit, keep moist and as cool as possible; and, since there are bees around to do the job, plant to scatter pollen so the fruit will set.

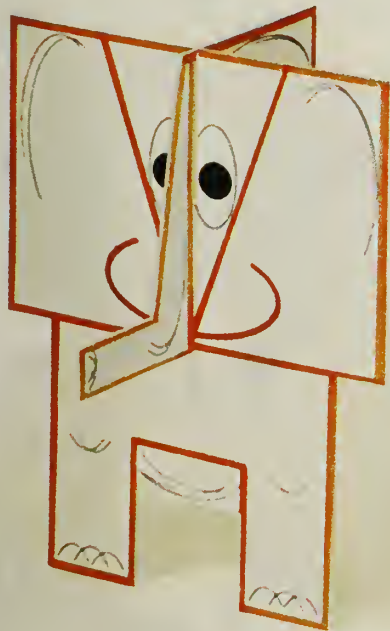

CARDBOARD PETS AND WOOLLY PILLOWS

Make a merry menagerie of top-notched toys and play folk! The interlocking cardboard cast on these pages includes (from left to right) a fit-together garden (lovely background for the beasts, or a urate centerpiece), friendly fish, bemused lion, timid elephant, friendly fish, bemused lion, timid elephant, timid tiger, and sprawling snake. Cut this "groovy" group from cardboard and parts together by tongue-and-groove method. Play with them! Or send one disassembled to a distant friend. (A snapshot of the completed toy is a help to re-thumbed chums.)

Woolly pillow pets are fun, too: a bull, wily owl, ther-puss, and a leopard guaranteed not to change spots. They're all made from the same rectangular pattern with added trimmings.

HOW TO MAKE CARDBOARD PETS AND WOOLLY PILLOWS

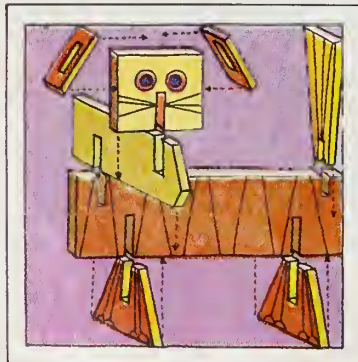

What could be simpler to send than a menagerie of interlocking toys that can be knocked down then tucked into a plain envelope for mailing? You make the zany zoo group from poster board, add features with colored seals and felt marking pens. Once you've learned this technique, you can create an ark-full of geometric animals.

Quick and easy to sew, our animal pillows can be carried everywhere—taken to bed, and eventually worn-out from cuddling. Teens love them, too.

Tiger. For the body cut a piece of poster board that measures 6"x17". Cut grooves where tail fits, about 3" from back of body. Groove for head is 2" from end. On bottom side cut 3" groove about 1" from end. Back feet fit into this. Front feet take a 3" slot 1/2" from other end.

Other measurements: Head, 6" wide, 6 1/2" tall. Make a 2 1/2" groove in center where neck fits. Neck measures 5"x8". (Cut end where head fits, into shape that resembles nose.) Cut two-inch grooves at front and back, opposite sides, for attaching head and body.

Cut ears, 2"x5" with a 3" groove in center. Two pieces cut 6 1/2" on bottom side, 2" at top, simulate legs. Center a 3" groove on top 2" side. To assemble, follow sketch.

Centerpiece charmers (not illustrated.) For tall, skinny version, cut rectangles measuring 3 1/2"x18" and 4 1/2"x16". Cut grooves so pieces fit together.

For medium size, cut two rectangles 8"x10". Then flare 8" sides until they measure 4 1/2". Center 5" slot on small end and one on 8" side.

For third flower, cut two 8" squares. Center slots on one side of each piece.

Interlock all pieces, then add seals for flowers. Draw stem lines with marking pen.

Elephant. Start with two pieces white poster board that measure 8 1/2"x11". On one piece make recesses on each side about 6" from the 8 1/2" side; (these measure 1"). You'll have one end measuring 8 1/2", opposite end, 6 1/2" wide. On short end, measure 2" from each side then cut out a 2 1/2" square for legs. Follow diagram, adding features with pen.

On second rectangle, cut legs and trunk stair-step fashion. Cut one 3" slot for fitting into first piece.

Snaka-gator. Start by selecting two colors of poster board. Cut three rectangles in each color that measure 3"x10"; then cut two measuring 4"x6" in one color and another 4"x6" size in second color, for head.

Measure about 1 1/2" from each short end on all six pieces that will be body. Cut slots 1 1/2" deep at this point. When fitting pieces together, slots of one color will be on top, others

A glowing holiday table. Before your guests swoop down to sample the delectable fare, they'll stop to compliment your ingenious table setting. Start with a back-of-the-table screen made of cloth-covered cardboard—each porthole featuring a gold cord ornament. Instead of place mats, try coordinating napkins edged with a fuchsia wool border. As favors (or centerpieces) bake Coconut Candle Cookies (recipe p. 86), and add a tiny taper in the center of each. Strive for the tasteful harmony of Floral Lace flatware with Medici china and Ambassador crystal. Final touch—a color-matched tree festooned with swags of wool yarn and matching baubles.

on bottom. The piece that's in front section has two grooves to hold mouth.

For mouth, cut two rectangles that measure 4"x6". Then cut another, same size, in opposite color for head. Cut grooves for fitting these pieces together. Follow sketch for adding the features of seals and black pen.

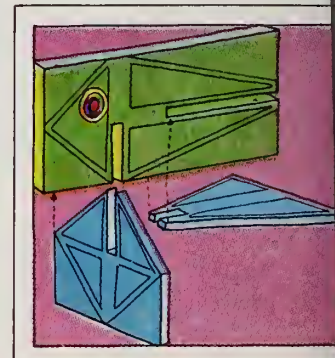

Lion (no sketch.) Cut a 7"x12" head from brown poster board. Glue a 5 1/2" white square 3/4" from outer edge on three sides. Then glue a gold triangular nose onto white piece.

At base of white face, cut 1" slots on each side. Cut two more grooves 2 1/2" deep and 1" from outer edges directly under first slots. Front paws fit into these. Then cut two more pieces 4"x7". These pieces have 1 1/2" slots on long side, about 1" from either end where back paws go.

Front paws measure 3"x5 1/2" with 1 1/2" slots cut 1" from end. Back paws, 3"x5" with 2 1/2" slots cut on 3" side.

For ears, cut a 4" square diagonally until you have equal triangles. Cut slots that measure 2 1/2" long and are centered 1/2" from edge of long side. Slip these over head as shown in photograph.

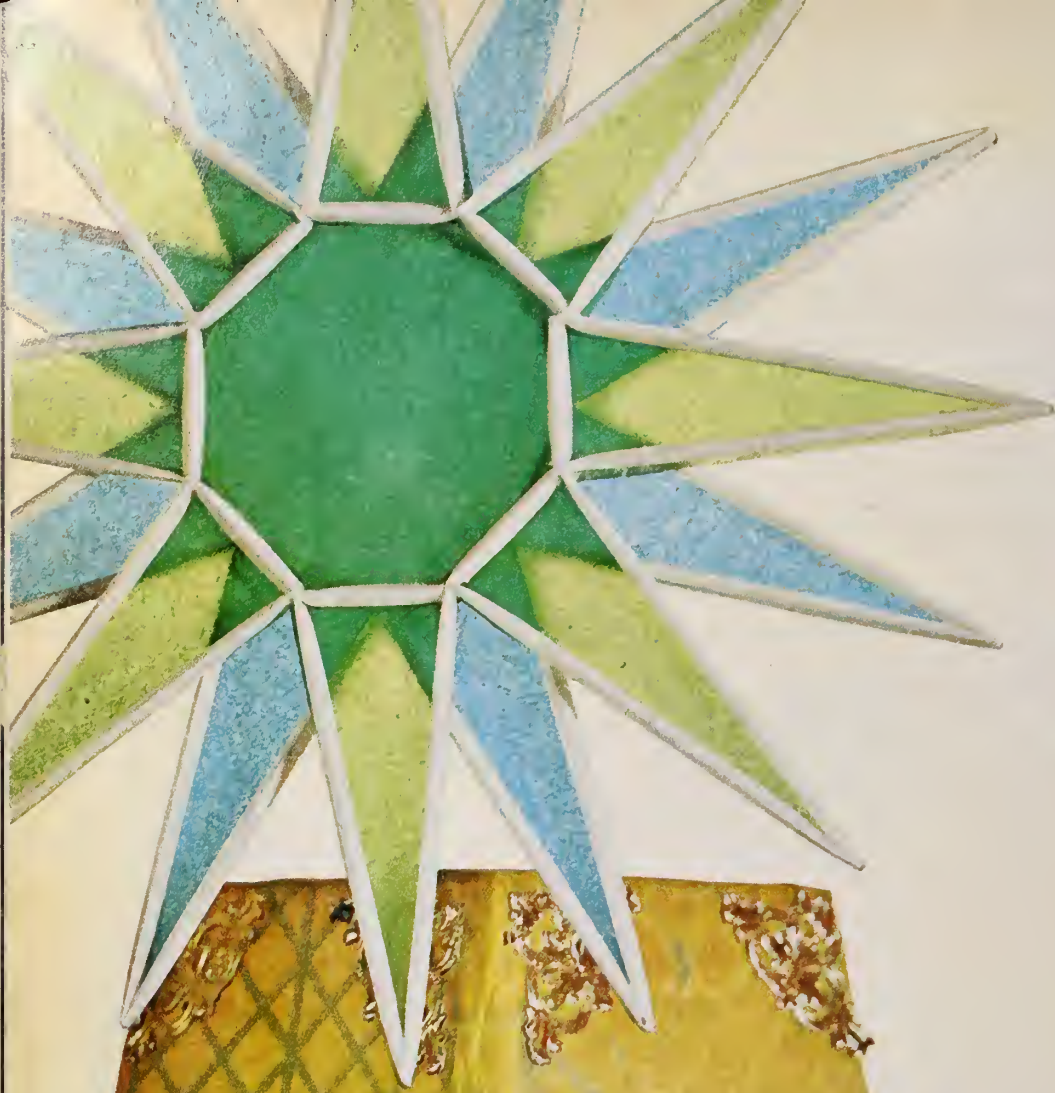

Fish. From green poster board cut a 5"x10" piece. Make a 3" slot in center of one side for tail to slide into. Cut triangles measuring 2 1/2"x4 1/2"x4 1/2" for tail; barn-shape fins measure 3 1/2"x5". This piece fits into 2 1/2" groove on bottom side of body about 4" from front.

Pillows to sew. Use fabric that is reasonably durable such as fake fur or printed flannel. You can substitute felt, gluing on contrasting colors to resemble fake fur. Our pillows all measure 8"x16". (Sketch far right.) For cutting out eyes, beaks, mouth, feet, and tails, follow sketch for owl, sketch 2 for panther and leopard, and sketch 3 for cow. Feet and tails should be sewed; features may be glued on.

SWINGING TREE TRIMS!

Round up your crew of helpers, because you'll want lots of these tree trims. They're designed to hang suspended in groups ranging from two to ten (or more if you're ambitious)—vertically if tree limbs are widely enough spaced—or festooned around, over, and under the branches, if your evergreen is a full one. And there'll be little need for additional tinsel and glitter.

Though this is strictly today's tree, you'll find the effect quaintly reminiscent of its Victorian paper chain-cranberry-popcorn progenitor.

All the techniques are simple—you may have brought back versions of these from kindergarten—but take our updated, adult refresher course (and let the kids get in the fun).

Top left: soda straw and tissue paper stars; below, two berry baskets glued together tipped with a tassel to form a lantern-like shape; underneath, two snowflakes of plastic parchment. Ever tried wool and paper stitchery? Geometric forms at left and below are samples of this "old-new" art. Underneath, a tree with paper circle paste-ons—repeated in ornament above. This page, left, stunning string made from cut-up plastic box inserts—at right, on a grander scale, from inexpensive sundae cups.

Straw stars. Drinking straws come out of the kitchen to be transformed into spectacular tree trims. Or set up an assembly line to make quantities to hang in windows and doors. With the wide variety of tissue papers available, you'll find no trouble combining harmonious colors. There's no limit to the shapes and sizes. Scale yours to the tree you plan to decorate.

To start, flatten straws by drawing between fingers. Next, measure and mark at the center and one inch from each end. Crease on these marks and bend. Slit one end and slip it into the other to form a triangle.

To get the stained-glass effect, have uncut sheets of tissue paper ready. Or you can use origami paper that comes in glorious colors. Spread white glue onto a piece of cardboard or foil to make a shallow lake. Set a straw triangle in it to coat the underside; then set the straw on the colored paper.

Continue coating other triangles and place them on the paper until you have a desirable design. Be sure to have corners of the triangles touching at each of the design points. This gives the ornament extra strength. Add a drop of glue where the triangles join.

After the glue has had a sufficient chance to dry thoroughly, cut the paper from around outside edge. Glue one star on top of another, in the same or in a slightly different shape.

Yellow lantern. Two discarded berry baskets form the basis for this tassel-trimmed beauty that you can hang singly or in a cluster suspended from the wall or your ceiling.

Begin by cutting a piece of tissue paper about twice the size of each basket. Coat basket with glue, then center it on paper. Bring up to cover all sides; cut any excess paper from corners, then smooth down with fingers. Repeat on second basket. Paste the two together to form a lantern.

Conceal edges where baskets join with two strands of rick-rack interlocked. (We used an orange-gold combination.) Cover all corners on lantern with trims that you buy, snipped from gold foil. Center a tassel on bottom side of ornament; and attach with thread or wire.

You'll find the above technique works on similar containers—plastic sundae cups, cookie and candy dividers. When using more than one in a grouping, string them together with a piece of yarn.

Snowflakes. Cut shapes from plastic parchment (a foamed plastic film that's washable and waterproof). Cut from two to six layers (depending upon the thickness desired) with scissors or with a special heated plastic cutting knife (this tool laminates several thicknesses together).

If shapes are cut with a scissors, use double-faced tape, or Christmas-wrap a window like our bow one, at rear. It's an ordeal if you use felt tiebacks and a matching ribbon-trimmed valance. Felt doesn't need to be hemmed, and curtains can be pinned or stapled into place. With so many windowpanes, a simple treatment is best—like our green ornaments hung on velvet ribbon from tailored bows. In the ground, cone-shaped cherubs surround a candy jar with Candied Tangerine Peel. (Recipe page 88.) To make cherubs, form a cone from lightweight cardboard and firmly closed. Cut separate triangular arms (round the point) and attach in any position desired.

white glue to stick layers together. Try different color combinations to present a variety of effects. Fasten two snowflakes together with slots, fitting one into the other to give it good dimension.

Star-tipped tree. Children will enjoy creating several tree-shape ornaments in an array of colors. Or vary the size of the trees cutting them small, medium, and large and then stringing them together. This technique is a variation of paper chains—but instead of interlocking the rings, here they are glued down on their sides giving a three-dimensional quality to an easily made ornament. Start by laminating glazed paper to a sheet of stiff paper by spreading a coat of rubber cement over it. Then repeat the process on the other side so both sides can be trimmed. If air bubbles appear, prick them and rub smoothly with palm of hand until bubbles disappear. Always work from the center out.

Cut a tree shape. (Ours measures $5\frac{7}{8}$ " at widest width by $6\frac{1}{2}$ " in height.) Scallop the outside edge, as shown. Cut a dozen strips of heavy white paper that measure about $\frac{1}{2}$ " wide and 4" long. Glue ends together to form ten circles. Glue them to tree, as shown. Use one strip for tree base, other for folding into a star shape to set atop the tree. Trims placed inside circle are cut from bright glazed paper, dotted with a contrasting color of a felt tip marker. Tie a string to top of ornament for hanging.

Geometric shapes. From heavy-grade plain paper, cut simple shapes like those shown. Or try a circle, diamond, crescent, star, cross. (See directions for laminating paper.)

Punch evenly-spaced holes around the edge of the ornament either with a paper punch, large-size needle, or bodkin. With yarn and a large needle stitch around the ornament going in and out of the holes. (Overcasting, buttonhole, straight stitches work best.) A double row of punched holes around the ornament makes an interesting creation. Next, punch holes and making a yarn design in the center of the ornament. If your paper punch does not reach the center, use a heavy needle to punch holes in desired places.

If you care to conceal the stitches on the back side of the ornament, glue a piece of paper to the back. For ornament, below, glue a paper strip about $\frac{1}{2}$ " wide in the center after the stitching is completed. You find a combination of wood stitchery and paper circles particularly effective.

WORKSHOP WONDERS

Hail to you, hero with the hammer (not to mention nails, saw and lumber). Here are three workshop masterpieces. Dare you to light a fire of sheer adoration and admiration in your youngsters' eyes.

Fierce guardsman and haughty duchess (left) are destined for a place of honor in a young lad's and lassie's rooms. At first they'll display Christmas loot, later serve as a handy holder for piles of shirts, sweaters, and pajamas. And finally when the kids tire of them, transfer them to a mud room as colorful storage racks for boots and galoshes. Mouse-loving grandfather's clock (right) is in reality a commodious toy cabinet with plenty of space for all the careless clutter of childhood. It's easily constructed with two square door-hinged boxes and one center rectangular one. Felt dickory-dock decorations are glued on with extra trim of beads and braid. Clock face is wood with painted and numbered dowel ends.

Mice-people are "ride-em" and "hug-em" toys. They're made of gray velvet (cut to pattern and stuffed) sprinkled with felt flowers. Skate wheels provide go-power for bigger mouse. A most desirable doll's house. It comes apart for easy transportation. And the decor's a delight . . . gift wraps for wall paper, braid place mats for rugs, bought furniture given that custom look by adding canopies to beds, upholstery to chairs, paint to tables.

Royal lady shelf is constructed with $\frac{1}{4}$ " plywood. First, make a triangle with a base 30", sides $39\frac{3}{8}$ " and 8" deep.

Add three shelves (from top to bottom) $7\frac{1}{2}$ ", $14\frac{1}{2}$ " and $21\frac{3}{4}$ " long. Nail on two extra pieces; triangle at top is $7\frac{1}{2}$ " high, slat at base is 30" wide and $3\frac{1}{2}$ " high. The face is cut from a circle of plywood 12" in diameter, headdress from a rectangular piece of 4"x8" wood. Nail both to top of triangle.

Soldier guardshelf: (below) is made from five pieces of $\frac{1}{4}$ " plywood. To assemble soldier, first form rectangle $36\frac{1}{2}$ "x $18\frac{1}{2}$ " wide and 8" deep. Add as many 18" shelves as desired. We used three for deep shelf storage. Pieces at top and bottom of "body" are $18\frac{1}{2}$ " long and 4" high. Nail to outside of the rectangle. Cut the head 12" wide and 8" high and attach to top board. Part of the delight of these shelves is not only the vibrant colors, but simplicity of features and trims. Faces don't have to be complicated—these are mainly formed with circles for eyes, simple curves for mouths, and straight lines for noses. To achieve the quaint Victorian-type hairdo, paint all but a pie-shaped wedge which becomes the face. And there are many variations to be substituted for these human faces—try animal faces adapted from nature books—or other-planet beings borrowed from the world of science-fiction books. Don't underestimate the importance of dashing color combinations. Try shocking pink with deep henna red, sunbright gold, and piercing chartreuse, as used in the lady shelf. Or the more manly colors of the grenadier—marine blue, rocket red, tangerine with vivid yellow.

Eye-catching packages peeking from shelves are made with a variety of inventive (and inexpensive) gift garnishes. From top of lady shelf down: shocking pink sack is trimmed with muffin cups cut in ridges down to the bottom of cup and flattened to resemble flowers. Joy package is wrapped with green shelf paper—"J" and "Y" formed with sugar cake decorations, "O" with a coaster. Flower print of bottom gift is echoed by blooms cut from paper napkins in related colors, with stems of flattened paper drinking straws and a gold seal for a center of each bloom.

Soldier-shelf packages (from top down) Turquoise-wrapped surprise boasts a medallion center of cake decorations around a mustard background circle. Square box covered with diagonal contrasting colored paper utilizes soda straws crossed and then woven with gold thread into a star-shape. Make the "whirligig" adornment on green package with halved paper coasters tipped with supermarket sugar cake trims. Whimsical caricatures with Paper-sculpture Santa, complete with trusty team and made it down the chimney this year—to rally 'round the Christmas tree. You'll find full directions on page 12 guide you in making this Santa grouping. We've shown a sled heaped with luscious Pecan Crunch Cookies (see page 86) but if you're using Saint Nick et al to grace a b try filling the sled with tiny packages.

And here's a unique way to array your tree: First dorate with firefly lights, then hang an overlay of fine white balls, finally swag branches with strings of notion-counter pompons to simulate old-fashioned poploops of string for hair and features of gummed reinforcements and seals turn a plain white-paper wrapped gift into a conversation piece.

Mighty mice are very nice to have around the house. Clock-climbing mouse covered with gray velveteen has a teardrop base $8\frac{1}{4}$ " long x 6" wide. He's 6" high and $8\frac{1}{2}$ " long. Use the same teardrop shape when cutting out ears—approximately $5\frac{3}{4}$ "x $4\frac{1}{2}$ "; allow $\frac{1}{2}$ " for seams. Bristles from a brush or whisk broom substitute nicely for real-McCoy whiskers. For stuffing, use old nylon stockings, cotton padding, or crushed upholstery plastic. Lightweight cardboard firms up the base.

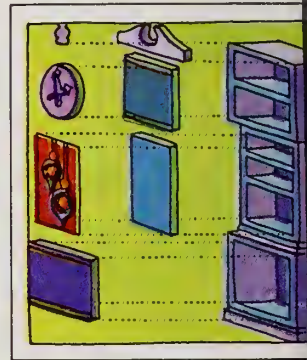

Ride-'em mouse (below) is made in the same way only larger. He's 11"x18" long and is mounted on an oval plywood base $15\frac{1}{2}$ "x6" wide, ears $15\frac{1}{2}$ "x6". Mount base on old skate, trim with felt eyes and posies. There's no end to the variety of Christmas toys to make for tots. Another simple shape to cut is that of a turtle. Try making an oversize one mounted on two skates out of red and white checked wool with velvet reins extending from his head. Or create a brave bull with gaily flowered velveteen using a band of fake fur on the face and horns covered with buckram. An opulent opossum can be fashioned from a half-circle covered with nubby wool, and a long velvet-banded tail. "Hoofs" and "paws" can be tipped with circles of wood to which chair casters have been nailed. The outlines of "ride-'em" toys don't have to be detailed—the more stylized, the better!

Grandfather clock cabinet (below) has an overall height of $5'8\frac{1}{2}"$. Bottom section is 18", mounted on a $2\frac{3}{4}"$ x18" long base. Center portion measures $14\frac{5}{8}"$ x $24"$. Clock section is $16\frac{3}{4}"$ x18" wide v-clock face diameter of Pediment, cut with a scroll saw, is decorated with a curtain finial. All sections are nailed together. The front of grandfather's clock is decorated with three colors of felt edged with gold braid. Pendulums trimmed with gold decal paper. Stacking dollhouse is made of $\frac{3}{8}"$ plywood. Four pegged together floors are $10\frac{3}{4}"$ high and 10" deep. Slat-roofed attic is $12\frac{1}{2}"$ high. Round handles allow young homeowners the attractions of a mobile home. Walls of residence are 10" high. To decorate interior walls, use colorful wrapping paper or felt. Pictures of door scenes pasted on window frames create an open-air look. Make some of the furniture yourself using children's blocks for end tables, a coffee table from a round pocket mirror and a bottle cap, tiny picture frames with gold cord, shelves from strips of balsa wood. The canopied bed stands out as a box—but when covered with frills, felt, and a copy supported with balsa wood poles, it's fit for a princess. Rugs can be made in a variety of ways; felt can be trimmed with fringe, place mats can be cut and fitted into wall-to-wall carpeting or area rugs.

HOME-GROWN GIFT WRAPS

Print a peck of gift-wrap paper! If you haven't tried it since finger-painting days (and we hasten to add none of these are finger-painting)—take a look at some of these new techniques, and some old but still effective ones. You'll be surprised at what yards of art-nouveau and psychedelic dream wraps you can turn out. And best of all they'll look like no one else's . . . you may not be able to duplicate them yourself a second time. But every new variation will be uniquely charming—your own personal invention.

For the background of the printing, we used shelf paper in white and pastels, and paper toweling in white and yellow. Bold contemporary papers are created with 1-, 3-, and 4-inch paint rollers, calla-lily designs with different widths of string and poster paint, the batik-like prints with liquid dye and paper toweling, green-grocer specials with fruits and vegetables.

Pictures 1 through 7 illustrate reams of paper decorated with rollers. These wraps are all created by different widths of rollers, from 1" to 3", and by using the roller edges for the narrow lines as in package 2 and 4. To achieve the startling effects, just follow these easy steps. Allow yourself an adequate work area—a three- to six-foot table (painter's sawhorses with boards are ideal) a variety of water-based paint poured into cereal bowls or saucers—circumference of containers should be large enough to permit roller to move back and forth for a few inches—and plenty of newspapers to line the floor, as this operation can become a mite messy! Unroll the shelf paper in from three- to six-foot lengths, cut with scissors, and presto begin.

Rollers can be used to create designs of bold masses—such as package 1, 2, and 6. Or two rollers (of the same or different lengths) can be used simultaneously to cover the whole area of the paper, with contrasting colors—giving the grainy effect in package 5. Or use the same length rollers and run them crisscross along the paper—as in box 3 or vertically and horizontally as the spirit moves you. The checkerboard motif in number 7 is achieved by rolling the cylinders for a few inches and then quickly lifting them from the paper. The fact that they're uneven is far from a drawback, it contributes to the primitive look. After you've finished with your lengths of roller prints, lay the lengths of paper on the floor for a few minutes to let the colors set (they'll still be damp) then pick up each piece separately and hang it over a basement laundry line. Leave overnight for drying—then roll the pieces together for future inspired package wrapping.

Packages 8, 9, and 10 are simplified examples of a very ancient way of decorating paper—by string-pulling. Again shelf paper may be used—or ordinary brown wrapping paper (not shown) is amazingly effective. Cut off one, two, or three yards of paper (here, shorter lengths are handier to work with). Assemble ordinary postal string and heavier twine if desired to make thicker outlines. Cut string not longer than an arm's length (you'll be coiling some on the paper with the rest hanging over). Dip the string in paint, squeezing out the excess, and lay it in swirls and loops on the paper as illustrated below.

Fold a square of newspaper over the coiled string—exerting a gentle pressure with the palm of the left hand—then quickly pull the string which extends from between the newspaper and the shelf paper toward you with one continuous motion. Remove the newspaper and let the design dry thoroughly.

Gather 'round the wassail bowl for an open house that turns the "hectic" out of holiday entertaining. You bake the handsome Light Fruitcake in advance, of course. (This is not ordinary fruitcake: cup for cup, it has more nuts than fruit.) The Holiday Appetizer Pie is a zipped-up combination of cream cheese and dried beef which you heat briefly and serve with assorted crackers. For the hot, lightly spiced Rosy Wassail you blend cranberry juice cocktail, orange juice concentrate, and sauterne. And with each cup, the Anglo-Saxon greets you from which the drink gets its name: "was haile," or "your health!" Recipes on page 81.

Don't use more than two colors here. Gift wraps inspired by the grocery store can feature a wild collection of fruits, vegetables, and notion-hardware found in most supermarkets.

Pictures 11 through 15 show you some new variations on this well-known technique. Number 11 is wedges of cabbage, 12 are swirls from a giant Bermuda onion cut in the center so the pattern's on a grand scale. Number 13 features a combination of two methods—potato printing and rollers (mentioned earlier). For potato printing, cut vegetable in half and make a few notches with a paring knife. If the potato's not a particularly shapely one, trim edges into any desired outline. You can alternate the roller bands with strips of any of the fruits and vegetables shown here. Box 14 is the print from a cabbage head cut in half. For box 15, use a wire whisk (or a small onion) and make the wagon-wheel prints on box 16 with lemon slices. Try kitchen hardware—like the whisk below or cookie cutters, pancake turners, glass percolator lids.

Pictures 17 through 20: Is it expensive batik, a type of madras, or a complicated dyed paper? None of them! Our most sensational but in simple form of Christmas wrap. All these shadow designs are made with kitchen paper toweling and liquid dye. And can turn out yards of this perb-looking paper in a few hours. For a bulk mass-produced amount (box 17) use the cardboard core from the side of a regular-size roll of paper toweling. Reroll about three-quarters of the roll lightly. Fill a small basin with a cup of dye and a like amount of water. Repeat the process with another color. Immerse one end in one color, letting it remain in solution for about one minute, as shown below. For lighter shades and pastels, double the amount of water.

Remove and squeeze out excess liquid, and repeat with another color at the other end of the paper. Unroll carefully a loop over a clothesline. If shorter lengths, you'll find it easier folding six or eight of the squares into a very small, compact square—then mixing two or four colors of dye—and immersing each corner for a brief minute will produce feathered effects like box 19 and 20. Box 18 is made by folding paper toweling into triangles (like soldiers' hats) then dipping the three corners of the triangles. Footprints-in-the-snow (page 21 with matching card) is a whimsy paper for all ages. The sign's created by a clenched fist, four fingers, and the thumb (for a big toe), dipped in paint.

PLAYFUL COOKIES AND POP (CORN) ART

By Rita Holmberg Food Editor, and Patricia Dittberner, Associate

You start these happy goings-on with our favorite ginger cookie recipe and your children as "helpers." To produce the gingery people, you'll need only a few small cardboard boxes, aluminum foil, wooden picks—and a plan, before baking, as to just what you want the children to do. After decorating the cookies, the youngsters can secure them, with "baked-in" wooden picks, to a plastic foam base set in a not-too-shallow tray. Fluffy popcorn makes an ideal "snow cover." Our Sparkly Snowbirds call for surer, more coordinated hands. You dip birds, cut from our regular sugar cookie dough, in confectioners' sugar icing, and decorate with food coloring and tinted sugar crystals. Use the same recipe, or buy cookies at your store or bakery, for our perky Flowerpops. Those Caramel Snappers on the toy wagon are a snap to make with pecans, vanilla caramels, and semisweet chocolate pieces. Confetti Popcorn Balls—colored popcorn that bursts into white fluff around colored centers.

Your holiday dinner is well on its way to success with a handsome big ham, currant-glazed, studded with whole cloves, and simply garnished with sprigs of holly. Be sure to choose a ham large enough to provide leftovers for those impromptu snacks that are such a part of holiday living.) Little spiced pears go along nicely. For vegetables, you can't go wrong with Pecan-Sherried Onions, and Nutmeg Whipped Squash for a really traditional dinner. Count on our do-ahead and delicious Golden Fruit Freezer as a salad your family will love. For dessert: streusel-topped Mincemeat Tarts. They're filled with homemade mincemeat, easy to make ahead and can or freeze.

Caramel Snappers

On greased baking sheet, arrange pecan halves, flat side down, in groups of four. Center one vanilla caramel atop each cluster of pecans. Heat in slow oven (325°) till caramels soften, 7 to 8 minutes. Remove from oven; with a buttered spatula, flatten caramels over pecans. Cool slightly; remove from pan to waxed paper. Spread tops with melted semisweet chocolate pieces.

Sparkly Snowbirds

Thoroughly cream together $\frac{2}{3}$ cup shortening, $\frac{3}{4}$ cup sugar, and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Add 1 egg; beat till light and fluffy. Stir in 4 teaspoons milk. Sift together 2 cups sifted all-purpose flour, $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons baking powder, and $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt; blend into creamed mixture. Chill 1 hour.

On lightly floured surface, roll dough $\frac{3}{8}$ inch thick. Cut in bird shapes with cookie cutter. Place on greased cookie sheet; insert half a wooden pick in center of each bird's "back." Bake in moderate oven (375°) for about 8 minutes. Cool on rack. Twist picks gently to remove; use holes for ribbon tie later on.

Blend thoroughly 4 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 2 tablespoons cooking oil, 1 egg white, and $\frac{1}{2}$ cup plus 1 tablespoon milk. Place waxed paper under cooling rack. Dip cookies in the icing; place on rack. When thoroughly dry, drizzle with more of the icing to form second coat; allow to dry. Mix 2 drops blue or yellow food coloring with 2 tablespoons water. Brush mixture lightly over cookies; dry. (Cookies will appear smeared.) When dry, brush cookies with 1 slightly beaten egg white. Using full strength food coloring, paint on wings, eyes, etc. of birds. Sprinkle with matching sugar crystals; dry. Makes $1\frac{1}{2}$ dozen.

Confetti Popcorn Balls

Measure 5 quarts popped colored popcorn; keep hot in 300° oven. In buttered saucepan, combine 2 cups sugar, $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups water, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup light corn syrup, 1 teaspoon vinegar, and $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt. Cook to hard-ball stage (250°). Stir in 1 teaspoon vanilla. Pour slowly over popped corn, stirring just to mix thoroughly. Butter hands lightly; shape popcorn into 3-inch balls. Makes 15 to 20.

Flowerpops

Poinsettias: With kitchen shears, remove outer edge of a red jellied fruit slice. Dip shears in hot water between each cut. Round off edges of center semi-circle to form petal or leaf shape. With kitchen shears, cut crosswise to form two very thin petals. Repeat with additional red and green fruit slices. Cut a yellow jellied fruit slice into small cubes. Arrange red petals and green leaves in flower shape on a round sugar cookie; use yellow cubes for flower's center. Secure to cookie with confectioners' sugar icing.

Star Flowers: Cut green jellied fruit cubes crosswise into thin petals, 4 per cube. Cut strips and small squares from yellow and red jellied fruit slices. On sugar cookie, alternate candy petals and strips to form a flower. Center with a small square of fruit slice. Secure with confectioners' sugar icing.

To assemble Flowerpops: spread undecorated cookie with confectioners' sugar icing. Place frosted side of cookie against back of a decorated cookie, inserting flat wooden stick between. Dry thoroughly. Push stick into plastic foam in a 3-inch flowerpot; wrap flowerpot with green foil; add a red bow.

Winter Gingerland Cookies

Cream together 1 cup shortening and 1 cup sugar. Add 1 cup molasses, 1 egg, and 2 tablespoons vinegar; beat well. Sift together 5 cups sifted all-purpose flour, $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons soda, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon ginger, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, and 1 teaspoon cloves. Stir in creamed mixture. Chill for 2 hours. Roll dough $\frac{1}{4}$ inch thick on lightly floured surface. Cut and shape as explained below. Bake in 350° oven for 5 to 7 minutes. Cool slightly before removing to cooling rack.

To shape cookies: Cut tree dog, and standing gingerbread boys with standard cookie cutters. Insert half a wooden pick in leg or base of each, leaving part of pick extending. (Later insert pick in plastic foam block to keep cookies upright.)

Cookie skis are each $5\frac{1}{2} \times 2$ inch rectangles. Bake each with half a wooden pick stuck upright in center to form a handle. Later on for skier's leg stand. Sled is a 6x3-inch rectangle. (Attach candy canes with con-fectioners' sugar icing for runners later.) Cut sitting boy with standard cookie cutter; bake with legs pinned to grease foil-covered cardboard box. (Cool with legs propped up.)

Decorate cookies with confectioners' sugar icing piped through decorator tube; add candy features and colored sugar crystals.

To make popcorn snowman, make Confetti Popcorn Balls, substituting regular popcorn for colored. Assemble with wooden picks; use gumdrops for features and hat.

Line tray with plastic foam; arrange gingerbread cookies and popcorn snowman on tray. Cover base with popcorn.

GOOD-ENOUGH-TO-EAT GIFTS

Nothing says "Merry Christmas" quite as warmly as something good to eat that you made yourself. Maybe something like those Holiday Sparkles in the stacked candy dishes, bright snippets of hard candy flavored with cinnamon, peppermint, clove, anise—you decide. Or the glass jar of Frosted Filberts. The nuts are coated with a delicately spiced meringue and then slow-baked to sweet-and-crunchy goodness. Great nibble material! Or you might delight a neighbor with a basket of Swedish Lucia Buns, their tops studded with raisins and lightly sprinkled with sugar.

If you'd like to make someone's Noel particularly "joyeuse," put our Savarin Chantilly on your gift list. You drizzle a cognac-syrup mixture over this cakelike dessert bread, then glaze it with heated apricot preserves and trim with cherry-almond posies. At serving time, fill with sweetened, flavored whipped cream. Or consider our festive Nut Tree—a something-different gift to delight a family. You build the tree on a plastic foam-cone trunk. Center it in a tray, surround it with additional mixed nuts, and tuck in a nutcracker to make your gift complete.

 $\frac{1}{4}$ cup sugar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
2 cups sifted all-purpose flour

Stir down batter; spoon into well-greased 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ -cup ring mold. Cover; let rise till almost double, about 45 minutes. Bake in moderate oven (350°) about 35 minutes, till top is browned. Cool 5 minutes, then remove from mold; place on rack on baking sheet. With a meat fork, prick top of ring in several places. Gradually drizzle Savarin Syrup (below), a small amount at a time, over ring, till all syrup is absorbed. Let stand about 30 minutes. Then, drizzle on Apricot Glaze (below). Trim top with blanched almonds and candied cherries. At serving time, fill center with Creme Chantilly (below). Makes about 14 servings.

Savarin Syrup: Combine $\frac{3}{4}$ cup sugar and $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups water; bring to boiling. Remove from heat and cool to lukewarm. Stir in $\frac{1}{2}$ cup cognac, rum, or kirsch.

Apricot Glaze: Cook and stir one 12-ounce jar (about $1\frac{1}{4}$ cups) apricot preserves over low heat till melted; sieve. Spoon over ring.

Creme Chantilly: Whip 2 cups whipping cream with 2 tablespoons confectioners' sugar and 2 teaspoons vanilla.

Frosted Filberts

1 egg white
2 tablespoons cold water
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt
 $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon cinnamon
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon cloves
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon allspice
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sugar
2 cups whole filberts

gently to coat. Place coated nuts, one at a time, on greased baking sheet. Repeat till all nuts are coated. Bake in very slow oven (275°) for 40 minutes. Cool thoroughly. Store in tightly covered container.

Swedish Lucia Buns

2 packages active dry yeast
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup warm water
1 cup milk
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sugar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup butter or margarine
 $1\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoons salt
Dash powdered saffron
3 beaten eggs
5 to 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups sifted all-purpose flour
1 slightly beaten egg
Raisins
Dissolve yeast in warm water. In saucepan, combine milk, sugar, butter or margarine, salt, and saffron. Cook and stir till butter is melted. Cool to lukewarm; pour into mixing bowl. Stir in yeast mixture and the 3 eggs. Add about 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ cups of the flour; beat smooth. Beat in enough of remaining flour to make a soft dough. Turn out onto lightly floured surface. Knead till smooth. Place in a greased bowl, turning once to grease surface. Cover; let rise till double, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours. Divide dough in 24 pieces. Roll each piece to a rope about 12 inches long. Cut in half. Form each half into an S-shape, curving ends; cross two of these, forming an X with coiled ends. Brush buns with the remaining egg; place a raisin in center of each coil and one in center of roll. Sprinkle lightly with a little granulated sugar. Place on greased baking sheet. Let rise in warm place till nearly double in bulk, about 1 hour. Bake in moderate oven (375°) for 15 to 20 minutes or till lightly browned. Makes 2 dozen holiday rolls.

Nut Tree

You'll need about four to five pounds of assorted nuts in shells: walnuts, almonds, pecans, filberts, Brazil nuts, and pistachios.

Beginning at base of a 12-inch plastic foam cone, glue nuts, one at a time, with contact cement or regular household glue. Work around cone, allow glue to dry thoroughly before beginning the next ring. Repeat rings of nuts till cone is completely covered; top with one gold-painted walnut. Tint pistachios, soak white in full-strength green food coloring till desired shade is attained. Allow to dry thoroughly. Glue pistachios and gold foil leaves in spaces between nuts, filling any holes. Place nut cone on large serving tray; surround with additional assorted nuts.

Holiday Sparkles

1 cup sugar
 $\frac{1}{2}$ cup light corn syrup
 $\frac{1}{3}$ cup water
 $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon cinnamon, cloves, anise, or peppermint flavoring oil

Food coloring

Line bottom and sides of 8x10-inch pan with foil; butter. Butter sides of a 1-quart saucepan; in it, combine sugar, syrup, and water. Bring to boiling, stirring constantly, till sugar is dissolved. Continue cooking to hard-crack stage (300°). Do not stir. Remove from heat; stir in desired flavoring and the food coloring. Pour into prepared pan. When beginning to set around edge, lift foil out of pan. (Candy will be liquid and hot in center.)

With kitchen shears, cut a 1-inch strip from square of candy. Then snip into very small pieces of irregular shape. Repeat, cutting strips from outside edge of square each time. So that candy will not become too hard, plan to have 2 or 3 people to cut. Make only one batch at a time. Makes $\frac{1}{2}$ pound candy.

Soft Chiffon The safflower oil margarine

Highest in polyunsaturates, lowest in saturated fat of all margarines. Ideal for patients on modified, reduced fat diets.

Why safflower oil? Because it's lowest in saturated fat, highest in polyunsaturated fat,* of all oils. And every pound of Chiffon® Margarine contains over 1¼ cups of pure liquid safflower oil. This gives Chiffon a 4 to 1 ratio of polyunsaturated fat to saturated fat—highest of any margarine—even higher than corn oil margarines.

And flavor? Because Chiffon Margarine is made soft with light delicate safflower oil, it never has that "fatty" margarine taste. Chiffon really has the delicious melting flavor of the "expensive spread."

Free Booklet. For further information on balancing the fats in your diet, send for Chiffon's booklet, "Diets To Live By": P. O. Box 4783, Clinton, Iowa 52733.

*All the polyunsaturates in Chiffon are the natural or cis-cis form. The typical iodine value of safflower oil is 143 and the typical linoleic content is 73. ©1967, Anderson, Clayton & Co.

FAVORITE WAYS WITH OYSTERS

To lift the simple meal to the "special" class, add oysters. They're good many ways: straight from the shell . . . in an appetizer dish . . . or as a substantial accent.

Oyster Stuffing

Perfect complement for holiday turkey—

½ cup chopped celery
1 small onion, chopped
1 bay leaf
4 tablespoons butter garine
6 cups dry bread cubes
(14 slices bread)
1 tablespoon snipped
1 pint shucked fresh
2 beaten eggs
1 teaspoon poultry seasoning
1 teaspoon salt
Dash pepper

Cook celery, onion, bay leaf in butter or margarine until vegetables are tender and brown. Discard bay leaf. Add bread cubes and parsley to mixture; mix thoroughly. Drain oysters, reserving liquid. Chop oysters; add to mixture with eggs and seasonings. Add milk to oyster liquid to make ½ cup. Add egg and this liquid to stuffing. Makes enough stuffing for 10- to 12-pound turkey.

The Christmas Cracker Crusade

Hurdle your cracker horizons! Leap your cheese and cracker rut!

Because you and Christmas have been missing a lot!

What are you missing? Here's a short, thoughtful discussion on some of the crackers Keebler makes and what you can do with them.

BLT Ticks. The giggles come in when you're munching on a super-duper bacon, lettuce, and tomato cracker that is shaped in B, L, and T's.

And, think funny when you come to this cracker. Like putting caviar in the bulges of the B... Cool sour cream and chives on the L... Chopped-up bacon and mayonnaise on the T.

Sausage Scrambles. They're not just a little sausage-y. But greatly, hugely, and magnificently sausage-flavored.

So what goes with them? Lots.

Like hot, green peppers. Fat, black olives. A dunk called Guacamole Dunk. Here's the recipe for 12:

Sausage Scrambles

1 ripe avocado, mashed; 1/2 c. very finely chopped-up cucumber; 1/2 c. chopped onion; 1 3-oz. pkg. cream cheese; 2 T. lemon juice; 1/2 t. salt; bit of Tabasco; 1 t. paprika. Beat ingredients together until fluffy.

Wheat Toasts. They're thin. Toasty. Full of wheat and sesame seeds. Nifty—in short. Try spiking these crackers with spicy peperoni circles. White cheese rounds and Spanish olives. Or gobs of liver and chicken paté. (You can find them in any store.)

Wheat Toasts

Rye Toasts.

They're thin and toasted, too. But, better yet, their deep rye taste is sent soaring by the exotic caraway. Try supers anchovies. Red pimento and cheese. Or chips of corned beef mustard on them.

Go on. Experiment. Expand your cracker horizons. It won't

Rye Toasts

Besides these crackers, Keebler makes Onion Funions, Cheddar Lickens, Club Crackers, Tastyhouse Crackers, Cheese Toasters for chic Christmas crowds. Groovy, teenage ba Hanukkah parties, and on an

Just a hint of spice—a pleasant addition to your yuletide dinner—

Pare and cube butternut or other winter squash to measure 4 cups. Cook in boiling, salted water for 15 minutes, till tender; drain well. (Or: cook 2 12-ounce packages frozen squash according to package directions.) With rotary or electric beater, whip squash till smooth with 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon brown sugar, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon nutmeg, and $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt. Makes about 6 servings.

Homemade Mincemeat

Freeze or can in pie-size portions—an 8-inch pie uses about 2 cups mincemeat; a 9-inch pie or 6 tarts uses about 3 cups—

1 pound beef neck
 1½ pound suet
 5 medium apples, pared, cored, and cubed
 4½ cups raisins
 2½ cups sugar
 2½ cups currants
 2½ cups water
 ½ cup diced candied fruits and peels
 1½ teaspoons grated orange peel
 1 cup orange juice
 1 teaspoon grated lemon peel
 ¼ cup lemon juice
 1½ teaspoons salt
 ½ teaspoon nutmeg
 ¼ teaspoon mace
 In covered saucepan, simmer beef in water to cover for about 3 hours, till tender. Cool; put through coarse blade of food chopper with suet and apples. Combine with remaining ingredients in large saucepan. Cover; simmer 1 hour. Seal in hot sterilized jars. Or pack in freezer containers; leave ½ inch head space. Seal, label, and freeze. Makes 12 cups.

Mincemeat Tarts

Pastry:

1½ cups sifted all-purpose flour
 ½ teaspoon salt
 1½ cup shortening
 4 to 5 tablespoons cold water
 Sift together flour and salt. With pastry blender, cut in shortening till mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Sprinkle 1 tablespoon of the water over part of the mixture. Gently toss with fork; push to side of bowl. Repeat till all is moistened. Form into ball. On lightly floured surface, roll dough ⅛ inch thick. Cut in 5- or 6-inch circles. Fit pastry into tart pans, pressing out air bubbles. Trim pastry ½ inch beyond edge; turn under and flute. Makes 5 or 6 tart shells.

Tarts:

3 cups homemade mincemeat
 ½ cup sifted all-purpose flour
 ½ cup sugar
 4 tablespoons butter or margarine
 Fill unbaked tart shells with mincemeat, using about ½ cup per tart. Sift together flour and sugar; cut in butter or margarine till crumbly. Sprinkle over tarts. Bake in hot oven (400°) for 25 to 30 minutes.

HOW TO CARVE A HAM

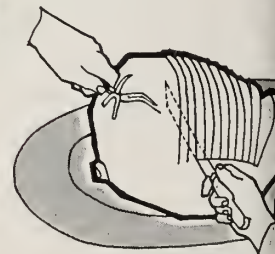

There's no need to be a carpenter when it's time to carve a whole holiday ham. Once you learn these few basic rules, you'll be carving with showmanship!

Rule number one, of course, is to make sure carving knife is very sharp. Put ham, bone or fat side up, on a large platter. Keep platter garnished with a minimum. Place platter so shank end of ham is at the right. Cut a few lean slices from thinner side of ham and set aside. If you're carving a left ham (as shown above), it will be the side nearest the bone. In a right ham, the far side.

Now turn ham up onto the surface you have just removed those first few slices. Holding ham securely with a carving fork, cut down to bone about 6 inches from shank end. Make another cut to release and remove a wedge of meat. Then cut into thin slices, cutting until knife touches bone.

Run knife along bone to remove slices quickly and easily. Slices to one side of platter on separate serving plate. Serve meat onto warm dinner plates. It's usually best to serve enough meat for everyone before serving. When more is needed, turn ham back to original position; cut a new set of slices in the same way.

Don't just have a Meat Loaf Dinner.

Have i Polpettoni Saporiti, instead.

To make the Fagioline:
When an Italian asks for Fagioline, what he really wants are green beans marinated in Italian dressing—garnished with 10 to 12 onion rings.

To make the Polpettoni: Italians don't just take a mound of meat and call it meat loaf. They divide the meat into individual servings. Then add special spices and rich sauces—and call them i Polpettoni Saporiti—little tasty meat loaves.

Now Chef Boy-Ar-Dee® makes a spaghetti sauce with mushrooms that's so Italian, you can turn a meat loaf into Polpettoni. The real secret of the recipe is that you cook the meat and a portion of the sauce together. The sauce's special combination of Italian spices, mushrooms and rich tomatoes cooks right into the meat and flavors it, making it moist and savory. Try this unique, easy recipe to make your meat loaf more than just meat loaf.

2 lbs. ground chuck	1 (15½-oz.) can
⅓ cup minced onions	Chef Boy-Ar-Dee Spaghetti

A NEW FACE FOR YOUR OLD FIREPLACE

Any room starts out ahead if it has a fireplace. This oldest of all focal points—originally used for cooking as well as a source of heat and light—adds warmth and interest to every decorating style. To make the most of your fireplace, give it a striking frame. Here we show how three different materials can bring excitement and distinction to a fireplace wall.

Left: The warmth of wood is a sure way to accent the cozy intimacy of a fireplace. Apply 1/4-inch plywood to the fireplace wall, using molding strips for battens, and finish off top of paneled area with decorative molding. Cover with a base coat of gloss enamel in warm beige and create a grain effect with a dark overglaze. If your fireplace is recessed, as shown here, install a ceiling spot. A soft downward light enhances the richness of the wood paneling and also illuminates art grouping and greenery.

Center: If you're a collector of Delft tiles, why not display them like this, as a border for your fireplace opening? If your fireplace wall is brick, frame the opening with 1/4-inch plywood cut to the combined width of the tile and molding. Cement tiles to the frame and finish with molding strips painted to match the fireplace wall. In this pleasant room, the refreshing blue and white color scheme of the tiles is repeated in china exhibited on an old French plate shelf and in the wallpaper pattern of the refreshment niche.

Below: Try this for a corking good fireplace wall. Cover area from floor to ceiling with one-foot-square cork tiles. Cut tiles to fit snugly around the fireplace opening and apply with tile cement. Neatly edge the cork with molding strips and paint in a complementary color. For a real knockout punch, paint mantel stark white or a bright accent color. Cork is an excellent choice for a wall installation because of its texture and easy-to-maintain surface. Also, cork rates high in sound absorbency so it's well suited for living rooms.

What's a pretty napkin like new Gala doing up at 2 A.M.?

Adding a welcome dash of color while it helps out.

You see, pretty as it is, Gala's definitely not just for show. Once you discover what a substantial handful of napkin Gala really is, you'll want to use it all the time.

Its two thick layers give new Gala the body and absorbency a good napkin needs.

But if you still think Gala is only for very special occasions, maybe you're right. Isn't that what a 2 A.M. feeding is?

Available with blue, silver, or avocado borders. Also all-white.

HOW TO HAVE YOUR CENTERPIECE IN STITCHES!

Here's a rewarding project to while away dull and drowsy winter evenings! Treat your table to sparkling home-cloths, mats, and runners with centerpiece to match! You find inspiration in a great variety of sources—such as flowers, vegetables, and fruit. Copy the simple outlines, then machine-stitch designs on ready-made cloths or by-the-yard fabric.

To complement your stitchery, translate the motif into a distinctive centerpiece of either fake or dried material. Presto! You're all set for an instant party. Here are some ideas to get you started on eye-catching tables.

Photograph: Howard

Some like onions . . . and some like orchids. The ready-made cloth (above) features a circular motif of applied onion and orchids. A lighthearted centerpiece carries out the same theme. To make it: fill a variety store milk-glass bowl with foam, insert a manzanita branch and deck with the same artificial vegetables and flowers.

Magic mushroom table setting: Mushrooms have distinctive silhouettes. Try tracing them on burlap runners and napkins, and then machine-embroidering the outlines. For centerpiece, cover a plastic foam ring with burlap and glue on fake mushrooms. Place votive lights inside ring.

Oranges offer dramatic possibilities for placemats. Cut circles from fabric and embroider to look like halved fruit. For companion piece, mound fake oranges on a footed cake plate and surround with artificial greens.

Red and green peppers embroidered or applied down the length of a long center runner are colorful and cheery for any meal. Pile an old caldron or skillet high with artificial peppers and intersperse with pretend parsley.

Both of these Betty Crocker mixes give you the same perfect pancakes.

So how do you decide which one to buy?

You have to be honest with yourself.

If you honestly like to mess around in the kitchen, cracking eggs and beating batters and mixing things, then the Regular Mix is for you. You have to add eggs, milk and shortening.

But if you're so honestly rushed in the morning that you need to save time, you want our Complete Mix. We've added the eggs, the milk, the shortening; done the mixing. All you do is add water, stir, and cook the pancakes. (You do have to pay a little more, though, because we've done most of the work.)

Either way, you'll get the same perfect pancakes. Honest.

GARDENING THIS MONTH

Norvell Gillespie, Better Homes and Gardens Western Field Editor

How to care for a live Christmas tree. There are many reasons for getting living Christmas trees. Their freshness continues even after many days in the dryness of the home. They arrive green and depart green with all their needles intact. They practically eliminate the ever-fearful fire hazard. And, after the holidays they can be planted in the yard or used as tub plants on the patio (and reused indoors next Christmas).

One of the most popular living Christmas trees is the cedar cedar. This tree, with its grayish-green foliage, has been widely used outdoors for years and is increasingly favored for use in tubs because of its slow growth. Westerners also make use of two spruces, the Norway and the Colorado blue spruce. Both are slow growing and can be kept in tubs for several years if started out small. Growth is compact and pyramidal in the Christmas tradition.

Your taste may run to the long-needle pines which have an informal quality about them that is most appealing. Monterey pine, Scotch pine, and Japanese black pine are all suitable for more than one season indoors if purchased small.

The initial cost of a living Christmas tree is only slightly higher than one off a cut-tree lot, but its evergreen freshness and multiple use make it a bargain in the long run.

To keep your live Christmas tree in prime condition, thoroughly moisten the soil ball and wrap in a plastic sheet—you can get a good-size polyethylene sheet by cutting open a cover in which dry cleaners return garments. To protect carpet or floor, set the tree in a foil-lined basket. Paint the basket and ornament with decorations.

Pruning. This is a good time to prune shrubs and trees, assuming the weather is dry enough for you to work outdoors. The big job is to cut out dead wood, head back leggy shrubs, trim bushy ones, and shape ornamentals. In the Northwest, it's a good idea to get rid of dense growth and long branches, especially on evergreens, that might be damaged by winter winds and snow.

Removing dead, diseased, or injured wood increases the vigor of the plant and also helps maintain a shapely plant. In the case of fruit trees, the basic purpose is to increase yield.

Good tools speed up the job of pruning. A quality pair of hand shears is vital. Next in importance is a pair of lopping shears, a pair of hedge shears, a pruning saw, and a telescoping pole pruner. Telescoping pruners are ideal for reaching the upper branches of small trees. It's easy to handle branches eight to twelve feet above the ground. Always make your cuts above buds, a small side branch, or a main branch. Avoid leaving stubs. Insects and diseases find these slow-to-heal wounds an easy entry into the heart of the plant.

Plant sweet peas. A Belvedere gardener, who evidently listened to Lady Bird Johnson's plea for more beauty, planted a roadside row of sweet peas last year at this time. The resulting 50-foot sweet pea "hedge" brought color and fragrance to the entire neighborhood. Perhaps the idea will catch on in more Western towns.

The big, husky multiflora sweet peas are wonderful improvements over the old-fashioned Spencers. The blooms are larger and carry up to five or six wavy-edged flowers on husky stems 18 inches long. The vines average anywhere from six to ten feet in length, depending on how much soil preparation has been put into the project, and upon the height of the trellis. Sweet peas like a free and easy root run—meaning open, porous conditions. Continued

NOTION COUNTER

HOMEMAKERS' SPECIALS!

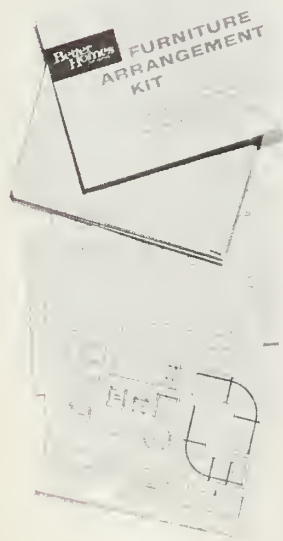

A notion counter's a fascinating spot, and if you linger long around it, you're sure to see several more things you need just as much as the one you came by for. We don't have a lot for display on our counter, but we've got three items we feel sure you're going to want. Look at them, read about them, and then send us your quarter, fifty-cent piece, or check for the ones you want.

25¢ If you're following sewing instructions and come across one or two, or possibly even more words about which you aren't sure, it's going to be difficult for you to get through the whole pattern idea to a nicely finished piece. The more you know, the better you'll sew! Here is a folder of clear definitions of sewing terms that will be fascinating to you, and incidentally, of course, with the full descriptions and information included, amounts to a class in needlework. Pick up your Simple Glossary of Sewing, 25c.

25¢ Pocket size, or of the size just right to fit into your hand, you can carry this chart with you and refer to it on any occasion when you wish to check food possibilities. Individual food items are readily found in this classified listing, so that you can easily gauge your calorie limit or watch the totals to keep within the 1500-a-day boundaries suggested for weight control. Or tell how much more you can safely take! The single chart is priced at 25c, but if you have a family on the diet control path, they're five for $1. Basic Calorie Chart, 25c.

50¢ This can be fun, or perhaps one of the most worthwhile items concerned with the rearrangement of your rooms, or that move to your new house! It's a kit providing scale drawings of all kinds of furniture pieces, so you can look among them and find a representation of each piece you have, or plan to have, in any one room. With these drawings, you'll find graph paper scaled to the furniture representations, so that on it you can draw the outline of the walls of your room, mark the widths of doors and windows, hearths, projections and recesses, and then proceed to place the furniture in the best possible arrangement. You can move pieces about until the best relationship is found, and then without having previously "tried" an actual piece of furniture, move each sofa, chair, table, lamp, and footstool right into the spot where it belongs! For amusement, or for keeps, you'll want the Furniture Arrangement Kit, 50c.

Continued

Sweet peas grow best during our cool winter months, so get the seed planted in December or January. Dig the soil deeply and mix in quantities of leaf mold or peat moss and plant food. Cover the seed with an inch of soil and water in well.

The tender, young sweet pea vines are liked by birds so much that the only safe way to protect them is to provide a cover of wire mesh or chicken wire. After the vines are six to eight inches high, the foliage apparently toughens up to the extent that it no longer appeals to hungry birds. Keep the blossoms cut for bright, fragrant bouquets. The more you cut, the more the vines will produce.

Plant bare-root trees. Correct planting gets your bare-root trees off to the proper start. During winter and early spring, the nurseries have their bins filled with deciduous fruit and shade trees, along with roses and shrubs. These are quite a bit cheaper than the same plants grown in containers. So use the next few weeks to add more bare-root specimens to your garden. If you receive your plants from a mail-order nursery, check the roots immediately upon arrival. If they look withered, soak them overnight in water before planting.

The new plants will put out leaves in late February or March, depending on how soon warm spring weather comes to your area.

An old myth exploded. One of the West's experts on ranunculus and anemones, offers this warning: tubers of these spring favorites should not be soaked previous to planting. That's an "old wives tale" in his viewpoint, and as a grower of millions of the Tecolote strain, he feels that soaking is a detriment. It often leads to rotting.

A better idea is to prepare the planting bed thorough two or three days ahead of planting. Saturate the soil at that time so it will not be necessary to sprinkle or irrigate from the time the tubers have been put in the ground until they have sprouted and have appeared above the surface.

Watch for garden pests, especially birds which like to nibble the tender tops as fast as they appear. Wire netting or cheesecloth covering foils these pests. Water the young plants lightly until they are well established. In the spring, when they are in active growth, they'll take all sorts of extra moisture and fertilizer. Liquid fish fertilizer is great at this time.

Tropical splendor from gloxinia. Though some green-thumb gardeners snicker at the name of the luxurious tropical plants known as gloxinias (some cynics declare the name sounds like a disease rather than a flower!), all joking stops once the plants are seen in their full glory.

These descendants of plants from the Brazilian jungles produce some of the most exciting flowers ever seen—huge, velvety, bell-shaped blooms, ruffled along the edges, and literally glowing with gorgeous hues of blue, purple, pink, red, as well as pure white. Some are curiously spotted, common ones called tiger-spotted strain others have blotches of solid colors. Even when the plant is not in bloom, deep green leaves are beautiful with their soft velvety appearance.

Yet, for all their beauty, gloxinias are not difficult to grow. If you can succeed with tuberous begonias, then these are your dish, too. They should be handled as houseplants, or better yet, grow them in a greenhouse. They like lots of light, but need shade from strong, burning rays of the sun. Night temperatures can drop to 50 degrees, but 63 to 65 is ideal. They enjoy humidity, but resent dry air and drafts.

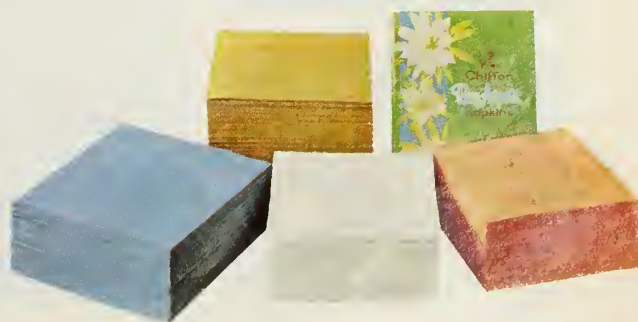

When they're in bloom, and this can be almost any month of the year in the West, they'll take lots of air. In the summer time they can be moved outdoors onto protected patios and porches. Tubers are ready now for 1968 plants. The shipping season lasts roughly from December 1 until the end of March. Though they can be grown from seed, it's a little bit tricky for beginners. It's best to start them from tubers.

Left below: Convert a back-splash ledge to a spice rack. Hold jars with a 2-inch-wide strip of 20-gauge stainless steel from a local metalsmith. Bend ends, screw to wall.

Left: Adapt ventilator-fan cabinet for shallow storage with shelves cut to fit in front of fan housing and ducts.

To use wasted wall space above a counter, build a shallow box: add 1/4-inch plastic or metal sliding-door tracks; insert wood, hardboard, metal, or plastic doors.

HOW TO MAKE SANTA, SLEIGH, AND REINDEER

Like to try your hand at the paper sculpture we've shown on Page 59? Then transfer this delightful "Night-before-Christmas" scene to 1" graph paper and you'll have Saint Nick, his chimney, snow-chariot, and rambunctious reindeer the same size as ours. Santa stands an imposing 11" high—the sleigh measures about 9½" long, 7½" high, 4" wide.

You'll need several sheets of this light cardboard, a roll of glazed gift wrap paper (we used bright red), colored tissue or construction paper to trim the sides, rubber cement, white glue, scissors, and pencils. Transfer pattern to 1" graph paper, cut, score, and notch as shown in drawings.

Mount glazed paper on each side of the sleigh up to the place where runners start leaving white paper for runners and bottom section. Cover only one side of the sleigh seat with glazed paper—but both sides of the pattern piece that will serve as front, back, and bottom. Decorate the sides with paper designs like ours—or create your own. Score and fold as indicated then glue in bottom, front, and back of sleigh. Front area must be notched so the paper can be glued in the same curve as the pattern indicates. Glue seat in place.

Reindeer: Body is light cardboard with ears, neck, head, antlers, and collar of a good grade of bond paper. Cover all parts on both sides with the glazed paper except the antlers. Collar, which requires covering on only one side, is trimmed with contrasting color-paper circles. A bead, small Christmas ball, or similar object is glued to the end of each reindeer's nose. Eyelashes are cut from black construction paper. Follow pattern for instruction on where to cut, fold, and glue. Though we've shown Santa, chimney, reindeer, and sleigh as one unit, any part is an attractive decoration by itself.

Continued

Sleigh: If you're planning to fill it with cookies, cut the runners from poster board or make them with strips of thin plywood, with two extra pieces under the body of the sleigh for reinforcement. If the purpose is purely ornamental, use lightweight cardboard throughout.

Edison Electric Institute

A clean break with the past. Make your home truly modern—old or new—with flameless electric heating-and-cooling. So little space you can tuck your heating-and-cooling unit in an ordinary closet. In fact, you'll gain space all over the house... perhaps even your bedroom. Because a flameless electric furnace requires no big furnace or radiators. HOW TO MAKE SANTA Continued

Set out a Smorgasbord of dips!

It's easy with 7 excitingly different Fritos® Brand Dip Mixes.

Bacon-Onion Meat Loaf: a taste-lift for an old favorite. To your meat loaf recipe, add 1 twin-pack Fritos Brand Bacon-Onion Dip Mix dissolved in 1/4 cup water. The first bite will bring compliments.

Body of Santa should be made with light weight cardboard covered with glazed paper on both sides. Use flesh color for face, ears and hands; black for boots. Santa's tunic also made with cardboard—but does not need to be faced with glazed paper on the inside. Fold and glue tab areas (with white glue) as indicated on the pattern. Insert Santa's ears through slashes in head before gluing tab in place.

The ears should be strong enough to hold the head in place. Use cut paper or paint for features to be used on face, leaving the beard white.

After body and head are assembled, glue Santa's pack in place, then fold and glue one hand over the belt, the other over sack. The "fur trim" for hat band, tassel, and edge of tunic is made by cutting white paper 1 1/2" long and 1/4" wide, then curling the individual pieces around scissors, pencil, or knitting needle, and finally gluing circles down on the edge side.

Make the chimney as indicated in the top sketch above, and trim with cut paper bricks. Or draw lines to simulate bricks with a felt marking pen. With a sharp knife make a slash for inserting Santa's leg—or you'd prefer him as an effective hanging ornament, pierce a small hole for a string in the top of the hat.

This old-fashioned sleigh with prancing team should find a place of honor at the through the house. ■ your local bank offers at least a few different checking services to make it easy for you to transfer money—anywhere in the world. Here's a quick look at these nine services:

BANK CHECKING SERVICES

Regular checking account.

The cost of a regular account varies with the amount of your average monthly balance and activity in your account. Some banks require you to keep a fixed minimum balance in your account to offset handling charges; you're charged extra if your balance drops below the limit, or if you write more checks than usual.

Special checking account.

A minimum balance is required. Instead, you pay about 10 cents for each check you write—and often a monthly service charge of about 50 cents.

Traveler's checks. At a typical cost of one dollar per $100 worth of checks, these are as good as cash on a trip—and far safer to carry. You usually get a fast refund if you lose them, providing you notify the issuer immediately.

Cashier's check. This may not cost you anything if you're a regular depositor at the bank. Otherwise, the average fee for a cashier's check is about 25 cents, and it may run as high as $1.00. Essentially, what you're doing is trading cash in for the amount of the check for the bank's guarantee to pay the check. Cashier's checks often are required for the down payment on a home.

Certified check. This service differs from a cashier's check in that it's your personal check, guaranteed by your bank to be good. There usually is no charge for this service.

Gift check. An appealing way to give money on special occasions, this colorful check often has messages like "Happy Birthday" or "Merry Christmas" printed on it. The average charge is 25 cents a check.

Personal money order. This is a convenient way to pay bills if you don't have a bank account. For sums over ten dollars, the bank fee usually runs less than Postal Money Orders.

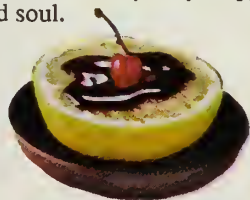

Foreign remittances. Although these are most frequently used in large business transactions, they can serve travelers as well. Before taking a trip, you can arrange with your bank to have money held for you at overseas branches and correspondent banks.

For example, you plan to stop off in Venice in the middle of a European trip. You simply go to the appropriate local bank and pick up the prearranged amount of cash, either in U.S. dollars or local currency; you then can convert this into traveler's checks if you wish.

Introducing an exotic new spice: good old Molasses.

Brer Rabbit Molasses is the newest flavor trick to happen to foods. It enhances them with a delicate sweet, yet tart taste. A spicy aroma. And a lot of nourishment, too. Using our light or dark molasses, try the ideas below. You'll see how quick and easy it is to stir anybody's appetite and soul.

Trickle molasses over grapefruit for a new and dramatic personality. Also do it on vanilla ice cream or applesauce.

Brush your bacon with molasses and broil. It'll give it a lot of character.

Pork Chop 'N Apple Casserole:

An enticing dinner dish.

4 lean pork chops (trim fat) salt
1 tbs. shortening
4 cups sliced tart cooking apples
¼ cup raisins
1 tsp. grated lemon rind
¼ cup Brer Rabbit Molasses
¼ cup water

Preheat oven to 350°F. Sprinkle pork chops with salt; sauté in shortening until brown. Mix together apples, raisins and lemon rind, and place in 2-qt. greased baking dish. Combine molasses and water; pour over apple mixture. Put in browned pork chops. Cover and bake 1 hour. Remove cover and bake ½ hour more. Makes 4 servings.

Mix a tablespoon of molasses to a glass of cold milk and have your daily shot of iron in the most pleasant way.

We have many other recipes for all kinds of occasions. Just send 25¢ to Brer Rabbit, P.O. Box 179, New York, N. Y. 10046, and we'll send you our Molasses Cookbook right away.

R. R. REYNOLDS FOODS, INC.

Remittances also are a convenient way to send money to someone abroad. For amounts from $500 to $2,500, the charge is generally about $1.25—plus air mail or cable costs.

Letter of Credit. This transaction is particularly useful when you're transferring more than $500 overseas. Arrangements are made through your local bank, and the amount is payable only in the currency of the foreign country where it is cashed. A letter of credit will cost you about one percent of the total value, with a minimum service charge of $5.

A VACATION HOUSE THAT ARRIVES LIKE A NICE BIG CHRISTMAS PACKAGE

By Noel Seney, Building Editor

Photographs: Bill Hedrich, Hedrich-Blessing. Design sponsor: U. S. Plywood/Divco

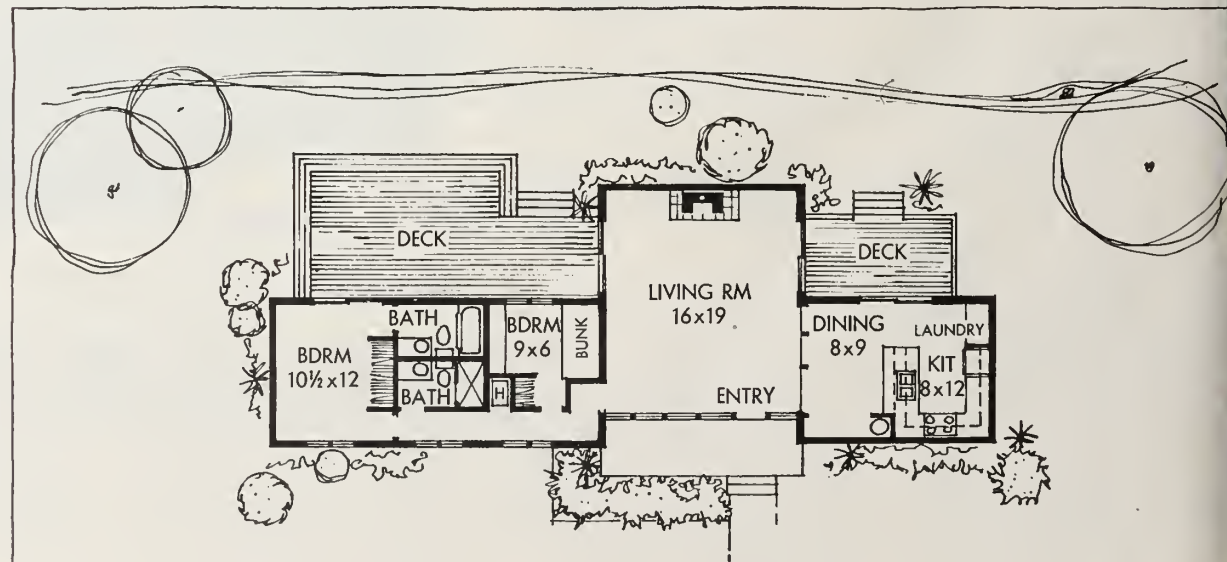

This vacation house is the breakthrough that could put your family into a second home of your own sooner than you'd hoped. It was built in a mobile home factory and can be towed on wheels anywhere. So whether you pick a remote site or a developed vacation area, you're saved the worry of supervising construction miles from home. When your vacation house arrives, it's placed on a permanent foundation, "plugged in" for utilities, and it's ready for use.

Shown here is a brand-new model which was towed to a vacation-retirement community, Bella Vista Village, Arkansas. Smart styling makes it look like a permanent, livable home, not something just temporarily parked.

Once in place, this house lets you do what came for: vacation. The vertical wood siding is abraded cedar plywood; fascia and panels under the windows are coated with polyvinyl fluoropolymer film—so they won't need attention for years.

During shipment, the entry porch and its overhang (top photo) and the projecting living room (lower photo) collapse inside the main rectangle. We added two decks—one large enough for entertaining, plus a small one, just right for a family size outdoor dining room.

For buying information, see page 101

Handsome prefinished materials hide the fact the living room (above) was once folded up. The only clue is the false ceiling beam that covers the joint there. The warm-toned hickory paneling hides its joint in a V-groove, and the floor's parquet pattern does the same trick.

Furniture arranging is easy—and there's space for a comfortable grouping like this so the whole family can lounge away a rainy day. On sunny days, the location of the sliding glass doors lets the room become almost a part of the decks on each side.

The compact kitchen-dining area (left) is packed with vacation-style efficiency. Because of the dead-end U-shape of the work area (see plan), cooking requires almost no walking. Behind the louvered door, there is space to install stackable laundry equipment.

The sliding glass door provides light and ventilation and makes the outdoor eating area as handy as the one inside.

The new key that baffles thieves

Protect your family and your possessions with a Sargent Maximum Security System. The key can't be duplicated by conventional key cutting machines, and the lock cylinder is highly pick-resistant.

The secret: three interlocking rows of pins resist picking by intruders. And your key is exclusive. We will never make another like it.

See your locksmith for full information.

Give your wife a Bernzomatic Propane Torch for Christmas. (just to be sure of getting one) any, your wife may not appreciate the Bernzomatic Propane Torch kit. Even though she can use it to melt jewelry, antique furniture, and own the meringue on her pies. Promise her something else.

A filmy negligee. Exotic perfume. Then, start hinting. Explain how a torch will help you sweat and thaw pipes, lay tile, peel paint, and do a hundred money-saving jobs around the house.

Mention how prices start at $7.50 (pretty good when you figure every Bernzomatic Propane Torch is guaranteed for life). If she doesn't take the hint, threaten to buy her one. That always brings them around.

Guarantee: The Bernzomatic torch burner is guaranteed for the life of the owner. When returned to our factory, it will be put in perfect mechanical condition. It doesn't matter how the burner was damaged. We will either fix it or send you a new one free of charge.

FOCUS ON FOYERS

Your foyer should be one of the most appealing areas in your home. After all, it's the first place people see. So splurge a bit in decorating that front entry. Choose a wild wallpaper—showcase a prized antique—hang an elegant lighting fixture. For a smooth traffic flow, keep furnishings to a minimum and be sure each piece contributes to the mood you want to create.

Above: A recessed foyer is a natural for displaying a collection of drawings such as this one from the Napoleonic era. Slim table is the same width as the recess so traffic path is open to the doorway. Alternate idea: feature one large painting over a cantilevered shelf.

Left: To vitalize a flat-looking foyer, put pattern into play. Look at the diversion created here with a flamboyant wallpaper on one wall, richly grained paneling on another, and a slate floor in irregular block design. A sizable foyer such as this can also double for entertaining when equipped with a buffet and extra seating.

Below left: A mirror is the best space-stretching friend a small foyer ever had. To give the mirror a period look, fit it into an ornately carved picture frame and hang above a narrow table with an antiqued wooden top. Flank with candlelit sconces reminiscent of the gaslight era. Or, you might use a group of smaller mirrors, all sizes and shapes, in old picture frames.

Below: To establish a definite mood in your foyer, it's best to start from scratch. Leftovers belong in the refrigerator, not in your entrance hall. Here a Far Eastern theme is carried out with an Oriental scroll and brass stoves from India which support a plate glass shelf.

You might call Foremost Dairies' Lazy Puddin' an instant-instant pudding. Because now you can have rich, smooth, delicious pudding every time, all ready to serve, just by opening a can.

Maybe that all sounds too easy, but the fact is we go to a lot of trouble. We make Lazy Puddin' with milk, just as you would make it at home. Then we flash process it. Then we seal it in specially-lined cans to preserve its good fresh flavors: Chocolate, Chocolate Fudge, Vanilla, Butterscotch, and Lemon.

We went to all that trouble to save you just 10 minutes. But wouldn't it be nice to have 10 minutes to yourself once in awhile?

THIS IS CONVENIENCE!

THREE QUICK CREATIONS WITH CRANBERRIES!

Harvesttime . . . anytime . . . you can enjoy the ruby-red color and sweet-tart flavor of these cranberry recipes! They're made with canned cranberry sauce, ready-to-eat cranberry-orange relish, and bottled cranberry juice cocktail. And they're easy to prepare, so you'll want to serve them often.

Berried Treasure Puffs

Flavor plus! You whip sweet potatoes with pineapple, then spark them with cranberry—

- 1 1-pound 1-ounce can sweet potatoes
 - 1 8¾-ounce can (1 cup) crushed pineapple, drained
 - 1 egg
 - 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, melted
 - ½ teaspoon salt
 - Dash pepper

To serve, unmold and garnish with California walnut halves (or serve in the custard cups, if desired). Makes 8 servings.

Cranberry-Orange Freeze

Be sure to keep this extra-easy salad in mind for holiday meals—

- 1 3¾-ounce package vanilla whipped dessert mix

1 cup cranberry-orange relish
Prepare dessert mix according to package directions, substituting the ½ cup ginger ale for the water called for. Fold in cranberry-orange relish. Pour into 8x8x2-inch baking pan. Freeze 2 to 3 hours, or till firm. Cut in 6 servings. Arrange on crisp salad greens; garnish with frosted grapes, if desired.

POLLO ITALIANO

"Pollo" is the Italian word for chicken, not to be confused with that funny game played on horseback with mallets. "Pollo" you play on foot with drumsticks.

- 2 pounds chicken legs (or other chicken parts)
- 1 can (4 ounces) sliced mushrooms, drained
- 2 tablespoons shortening
- 1 can Franco-American Chicken or Giblet Gravy
- 1/3 cup green pepper strips

In your skillet, brown the chicken and mushrooms in shortening. Pour off fat. Now add Franco-American Chicken Gravy and green pepper strips. Cover and cook over a low heat for 45 minutes or until tender. (Better stir now and then.) Interesting for four.

CHICKEN IN A GARDEN

Once you make exotic dishes the easy Franco-American way, you'll want to master small, artistic touches: garnishes. Take it from the original all-thumbs girl—it takes practice. My first radish-turned-rose was the only vegetable ever admitted for emergency treatment. But here's a sure morale-booster for apprentice garnishers. Anyone can make broccoli flowerets. If they have broccoli. And if they don't have broccoli, they have to skip this recipe anyway.

- 1 can Franco-American Chicken Gravy
- 1/4 cup milk
- 1 cup shredded process American cheese
- 1 tablespoon Sherry (optional, but exciting)
- Dash of each: salt, pepper, poultry seasoning
- 1 package (10 ounces) frozen broccoli spears, cooked and drained
- 2 cups cooked noodles
- 1 cup cubed cooked chicken

Heat gravy, milk, cheese (3/4 cup only), Sherry, and seasonings until cheese melts. Dice broccoli stems, saving flowerets. In 1 1/2 quart casserole, combine gravy mixture, noodles, chicken, and broccoli stems. Now for the artistic touch. Top with flowerets, pressing lightly into casserole. Sprinkle with remaining cheese. Bake at 350°F for 30 minutes. Makes 3 to 4 servings.

EXTRA ADDED ATTRACTION

SAUCE ALMONDINE RAPIDE

The hardest thing about this sauce is keeping a straight face when you're deluged with compliments.

- 1 can Franco-American Chicken Gravy
- 2 tablespoons toasted slivered almonds
- 1 tablespoon Chablis or other dry white wine

In saucepan, combine all ingredients. Heat; stir now and then. Makes 1 1/4 cups sauce. Serve over chicken or vegetables.

NEW FREEDOM SHARES

What are they?
Who may buy them?

Americans have put their savings to work for freedom through U. S. Savings Bonds for many years. New Freedom Shares do the same job . . . plus. Read how.

Freedom Shares are U. S. Savings Notes. They pay a higher return than Savings Bonds, 4.74% when held to maturity. And they mature in just four-and-a-half years.

For regular Bond buyers only

These new Freedom Shares — which are not redeemable for the first year — are offered on a one-for-one basis with E Bonds, but only to people who belong to the Payroll Savings Plan where they work or the Bond-a-Month Plan where they bank.

There are four denominations of Freedom Shares, each of which may be paired with a Series E Bond of the same or larger denomination, as a "package."

For instance, for $39 total, you can purchase a Savings Bond that matures at $25 and a Freedom Share that matures at $25.

America needs your help

When you buy Savings Bonds and Freedom Shares, you do an important job for freedom, backing our men in Vietnam and helping to keep our country economically strong. The need is urgent. What you do counts.

Sign up

Tell your supervisor or the Payroll Department where you work (or any officer where you bank) that you'd like to join a Bond purchase plan. Decide how much you'll save . . . whether you want Freedom shares as well as Bonds . . . and just sign the authorization card.

You'll be helping your country as you help yourself. And the country needs your help.

The U. S. Government does not pay for this advertisement. It is presented as a public service in cooperation with the Treasury Department and The Advertising Council.

BIG IDEAS FOR BAY WINDOWS

Consider yourself lucky if your home has a bay window. This architectural feature rivals the fireplace as a source of warmth and charm. And the ways to treat a bay are as endless as they are exciting! You can spotlight it as a center of interest; frame a scenic view so you can enjoy the changing beauty of each season; create a handsome backdrop for furniture grouping or a collection of art objects. Remember—you're limited only by the scope of your imagination and the size of your budget.

Right, above: Does your bay window look out on a drab view? If so, establish your center of interest inside the room. Hang boldly patterned window shades and, for a real economy coup, add tieback draperies made from king-size bedsheets.

Right: In the reverse situation—where the bay overlooks a pleasant view—let nature help in the decoration. Treat the cluster of diamond-paned windows as one unit instead of tackling each window individually. Frame the bay with tieback draperies which permit a clear view of the outdoors. If the sun's rays are too intense and you want to cool the room without shutting out the view, add translucent curtains, inside the draperies. This tieback treatment also helps unify a conversation grouping set in the bay.

Right, below: A large bay can be deliberately understated to serve as a backdrop for a furniture arrangement or, in this case, several pieces of sculpture and pottery. The rope and reed blinds, while distinctive in themselves, do not steal attention from the collection displayed on the slate-top shelf behind the sofa.

SMART SEATING FOR SMALL KITCHENS

Photograph: Burgess. Designer: P. G. H.

A built-in table's big plus: you can size it exactly to fit space. For example, here, in a narrow corridor, a 6½-foot long, wall-hung counter seats four comfortably. Two feet from one end, shaped to 2½ feet across the corner (to accommodate serving dishes), this table makes breakfast a breeze. Small electrics, cereals, and condiments are all handily stored in the island less than two feet away.

If your kitchen is plagued with traffic jams, an expansive table may be the answer. Between meals, this type table stores—half size—out of the way, yet convenient for desk study duties. A 36-inch square table like this one has 18-inch pull-out leaves on both sides. Or, you can choose one with double fold-over top. Of course, the traditional drop-leaf table is a good space-saver, also.

Here's a wonderful
"extra" for your not-so-handy kitchen

This is a peninsula designed to change your expansive kitchen from an open energy waste to a convenient snack-and-visit center of your home. Are books, sports equipment, games, models, and all the other paraphernalia of growing up straining the storage in your boy's bedroom?

One of these masculine study centers may be the answer. Each has a roomy desk, plus drawers, cabinets, and shelves for everything from pencils to pogo sticks.

Top: This simple desk and auxiliary closet take up the entire length of a 12-foot wall. The units actually add to usable floor space by doing the jobs of several pieces of free-standing furniture.

The desk hangs from studs in the walls behind it and on either side, so there's plenty of room underneath for long legs.

The closet is compartmented, with shelves on one side, hanging space on the other. Accordion doors pull from the center.

Center: Cantilevered construction makes this study area ideal for a swivel-chair jockey—and when his homework is finished, he can turn to model-making at the eight-foot-long, laminated-plastic counter.

Three tiers of drawers underneath hold socks, shirts, and underwear; that big cabinet above at far right garages unfinished models.

Bottom: Here's how to keep a boy's eyes on his books and away from the activity outdoors. A bookcase and bulletin board flank three windows that are "blacked out" with sill-length draperies and heavy shades.

One end of the desk also serves as a night table; the other has drawers for foldable clothes. The unit is 9½ feet long, and 1½ feet deep.

REASURE HUNT CHRISTMAS TREE ORNAMENTS

by John Mebane

The Christmas tree did not come into general use as a focal point for the observance of Christmas in the home until the nineteenth century.

Christmas tree decorations and ornaments, therefore, are not of ancient origin. Nevertheless, they are old enough to be collectible, and there are some delightful and intriguing tree decorations first used in the nineteenth century. These are now being assembled in fascinating collections by many astute individuals who foresee a considerable rise in their values in the coming years.

Nineteenth century glass-blowers were an imaginative lot, and they produced all sorts of fanciful glass ornaments for Christmas trees, most of them dating from about the 1850s. Some experts have expressed the opinion that the first Christmas tree balls were the so-called "witch balls" made by glassblowers from the first quarter of the nineteenth century. "Witch balls" belie their name, because they actually are attractive glass balls which were hand-blown in clear, colored, and striped glass and intended primarily for use atop vases in various shapes, including vases. They are usually considered in the category of "whimsies"—fanciful glass ornaments made by blowers on their own initiative after they had officially quit work for the day. Early Christmas lights, also called vigil lights, were made in England and in this country and were used to hold small candles for burning on Christmas. According to George and Helen McKearin in their book American Glass, this type of light was once used in lighting fetes in Covent Garden. They are bulbous vase shapes and were blown in various colors. Carl W. Drepperd reported in his work The ABC's of Old Glass that the lights also were suspended from the boughs of Christmas trees and were utilized in Christmas tableaux. These vigil lights were later imitated in pressed glass and also were widely used on Yule trees. Some of these were produced in pattern glass of the type that attracts thousands of dedicated collectors today.

Glass balls of the type used today as tree ornaments are by no means recent. They were blown in various colors during the last century. However, they were easily breakable and are quite difficult to come by today. The nineteenth century glass balls were a good bit heavier than their modern counterparts with which we are so familiar.

All types of paper tree ornaments were made in the latter part of the nineteenth century and in the early years of the present one. A page of these from a 1902-1903 holiday catalog issued by Nerlich & Co., of Toronto, was reproduced in the December, 1962, issue of Spinning Wheel, showing lithographed centerpieces with fancy tinsel and colored celluloid ornamentation and lithographed dolls with carved heads, arms, and feet, and fancy ornamented cotton batting dresses. The Christmas tree dolls sold then for only $1.20 a dozen! Their values are substantially more today.

The lithographed ornaments included such things as angel figures, cherub heads, cats, and Santa Clauses. Other nineteenth century tree ornaments in similar shapes included those made of such materials as papier-mâché, wax, pottery, porcelain, wood, and Parian. The representations of angels in flight which decorate today's trees are patterned after similar representations made at least seventy-five years ago. The contemporary glass star shapes are derived from lithographed stars which were utilized last century. Other popular ornaments of years ago include a lithographed chain and tiny glass balls made in the shape of grapes.

Of course, Christmas cards also were hung on the Yule trees in generations past. Their immediate predecessors were the "Christmas pieces" which schoolboys created, doubtless with some reluctance, at the end of the winter term. These were sheets of paper with colored borders and headings on which the boys wrote sentences which served as greetings to their parents and proof of their penmanship progress.

Ornaments of glass, metal, paper, and other substances, fascinating as they were, were outdone in popularity, especially among the youngsters, by edible ornaments that once graced the Christmas tree. Christmas sweets of various types antedated the use of trees, but continued to be popular throughout the years. Many years ago, sweets were used to decorate the bases of candle trees, or candle trows as they were called, which preceded the full-blown Christmas trees. Later, such tidbits as sugar

How to get more out of a portable dishwasher.

There are lots of good reasons for buying a portable dishwasher. It's great if you're living in an apartment or home where you can't use a built-in. It saves cabinet space and money, too, for there's no remodeling, no installation cost. Just connect it to the sink faucet and plug it in.

But whatever your reason, remember this: the more a manufacturer puts into a portable dishwasher, the more you're going to get out of it. So look carefully at the important features. Take, for example, useable capacity and loading convenience. (The new KitchenAid portable dishwasher holds big, bulky things like mixing bowls and platters, little things like measuring spoons, and lots of dishes, glasses and silver. When you raise the lid, the top rack lifts up automatically. So you can easily load the lower rack.)

How well will it wash and dry? (Like KitchenAid built-in dishwashers, every KitchenAid portable has Hydro Sweep Wash, so effective you never have to hand-rinse dishes. And exclusive Flo-Thru Drying that's thorough and safe even for fine china and good plasticware. And if you live in a hard water area, choose a KitchenAid portable dishwasher with automatic rinse agent dispenser to help dishes dry spot-free.)

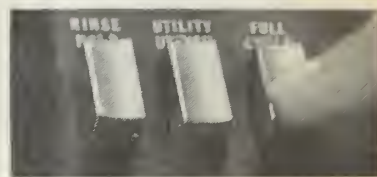

Then, be sure to consider how long it'll last. (Only KitchenAid uses premium porcelain enamel inside and out. An exclusive 3-coat porcelain enamel finish, called TriDura™, protects the wash chamber. Stains, scratches, food acids, odors and abrasions don't bother it. And every part of every KitchenAid dishwasher is thoroughly checked and each one is hooked up for a test run before it leaves the factory. KitchenAid designs its own motors, a full half horsepower, and tests them electronically before assembly.)

Check how it operates. (The new KitchenAid portable has instant-start and push-button cycles. Full Cycle washes a whole, mixed load of dishes and pans, gives them 3 rinses and dries them. Rinse and Hold is for giving a few breakfast or snack dishes a quick rinse. And if you have a big load of dirty pots and pans, the Utility and Utensil cycle will double-wash, rinse and quick dry them while you're eating.)

Then picture the dishwasher in your kitchen. (The new KitchenAid portable will blend in beautifully. It comes in avocado green, edged colonial-tone or white. With your choice of a hard maple cutting board or a handsome laminate top.) And, finally, check who makes the dishwasher. (KitchenAid portables are made by dishwasher specialists, The Hobart Manufacturing Company. They've made home dishwashers for nearly 20 years, and commercial dishwashers for restaurants and hospitals for over 80 years.)

So if you really want to get more out of a new portable dishwasher, see your KitchenAid dealer. He has a model priced for you. Check the Yellow Pages or write.

The kids' first snowman of the winter was a pretty standard model, but the sun melted it into a stylish abstraction.

A few houses away, the front door opens and light spills out in a bright band on the snow. Guests are being greeted on the porch amid the sound of laughter.

A flurry of snow turns the street lamp into a mysterious, magic blur. The weight of ice on their branches makes strange patterns out of familiar trees. A car drives past, its tail lights glowing like dots in the swirling whiteness.

Then, Burt, rounds the corner, returning from a Scout meeting.

"Crummy isn't it?" he asks.
"S?"

"Check," he says. "Boy, lots of houses already have all kinds of decorations. The houses and the trees, there's a lifesize Santa claus over on Oak Street.
The neighborhood has Wise Men and lots of stuff cut out and Christmas music being played. Sure makes this block down our block, the beauty of this winter night of snow show how it speaks was now than before."

"Up?" I ask surprise, I
